

I have endeavoured to fhew my gratitude, by faithfully pointing out the folly that prompts, and the ruin that awaits, the profecution of this unnatural war. But I am afraid the die is thrown, and we must ftand the hazard. I am afraid that good men have nothing now to do, but to weep over, what they cannot preventthe ruin of their country.

PREFACE to the FIRST EDITION.

I N the following OBSERVATIONS, I have taken that liberty of examining public measures, which, happily for this kingdom, every perfon in it enjoys. They contain the fentiments of a private and unconnected man; for which, should there be any thing wrong in them, he alone is answerable.

After all that has been written on the difpute with AMERICA, no reader can expect to be informed, in this Publication, of much that he has not before known. Perhaps, however, he may find in it fome new matter; and if he fhould, it will be chiefly in the Obfervations on the Nature of Civil Liberty, and the Policy of the War with America; and in the Appendix.

PREFACE to the FIFTH EDITION.

T H E favourable reception which the following Tract has met with, makes me abundant amends for all the abufe which it has brought upon me. I thould be ill employed, were I to take much notice of this abufe : But there is one circumftance attending it which I cannot help juft mentioning.

The principles on which I have argued form the foundation of every State as far as it is free, and are the fame with those taught by Mr. LOCKE, and all the writers on Civil Liberty who have been hitherto most admired in this country. But I find, with concern, that they are not approved by our Governours; and that they chuse to decline trying by them their prefent measures: For, in a pamphlet which has been circulated by government with great industry; these principles are pronounced to be "unnatural and wild, in-" compatible with practice; and the offspring of the distempered " imagination of a man byaffed by Party, and who writes to de-" ceive."

I muft take this opportunity to add, that I love quiet too well to think of ever entering into a controverfy with any writers; particularly, NAMELESS ones——Confcious of good intentions, and unconnected with any Party, I have endeavoured to plead the caufe of General Liberty and Juftice; and happy in knowing this, I fhall, in filence, commit myfelf to that indulgence and candour of the Public of which I have had fo much experience.

TO DOING OF BU T

OBSERVATIONS,

OBSERVATIONS, &c.

UR Colonies in NORTH AMERICA appear to be now determined to rifk and fuffer every thing, under the perfuation, that GREAT BRITAIN is attempting to rob them of that Liberty to which every member of fociety, and all civil communities, have a natural and unalienable right. The question, therefore, whether this is a reasonable perfuafion, is highly interefting, and deferves the most careful attention of every. Englishman who values Liberty, and wifnes to avoid flaining himfelf with the guilt of invading it. But it is impoffible to judge properly of this queftion without correct ideas of Liberty in general; and of the nature, limits, and principles of Civil Liberty in particular.—The following observations on this subject appear to me important, as well as just; and I cannot make myself eafy without offering them to the Public at the prefent period, big with events of the last confequence to this kingdom. I do this, with reluctance and pain, urged by ftrong feelings, but at the fame time checked by the confciousness that I am likely to deliver fentiments not favourable to the prefent measures of that government, under which I live, and to which I am a conftant and zealous well-wisher. Such, however, are my present sentiments and views, that this is a confideration of inferior moment with me; and, as I hope never to go beyond the bounds of decent discussion and expostulation, I flatter myself, that I shall be able to avoid giving any perfon just cause of offence.

The obfervations with which I fhall begin, are of a more general and abfiracted nature; but being, in my opinion, of particular confequence; and neceffary to introduce what I have principally in view, I hope they will be patiently read and confidered.

SECT. I. Of the Nature of Liberty in General.

N order to obtain a more diffinct and accurate view of the nature of Liberty as such, it will be useful to confider it under the four following general divisions.

By PHYSICAL LIBERTY I mean that principle of Spontaneity, or Self-determination, which conflitutes us Agents; or which gives us a command over our actions, rendering them properly ours, and not effects of the operation of any foreign caufe.—MORAL LIBERTY is the power of following, in all circumftances, our fenfe of right and wrong; or of acting in conformity to our reflecting and moral principles, without being controuled by any contrary principles.—RELIGIOUS LIBERTY fignifies the power of exercifing, without moleflation, that mode of religion which we think beft; or of making the decifions of our own conficiences, refpecting religious truth, the rule of our conduct, and not any of the decifions of others.——In like manner; CIVIL LIBERTY is the power of a Civil Society or State to govern itfelf by its own diference of a very solution, without being fubject to any foreign diference, or to the impositions of any extraneous will or power.

It fhould be obferved, that, according to these definitions of the different kinds of liberty, there is one general idea, that runs through them all; I mean, the idea of Self-direction, or Self-government.—Did our volitions originate not with ourfelves, but with fome cause over which we have no power; or were we under a necessity of always following fome will different from our own, we should want PHYSICAL LIBERTY.

In like manner; he whole perceptions of moral obligation are controuled by his paffions has loft his Moral Liberty; and the most common language applied to him is, that he wants Self-government.

He likewife who, in religion, cannot govern himfelf by his convictions of religious duty, but is obliged to receive formularies of faith, and to practife modes of worfhip impofed upon him by others, wants Religious Liberty. —And the Community alfo that is governed, not by itfelf, but by fome will independent of it, and over which it has no controul, wants Civil Liberty.

In all these cases there is a force which stands opposed to the agent's own will; and which, as far as it operates, produces Servitude......In the first case, this force is incompatible with the very idea of voluntary motion; and the subject of it is a mere passive infrument which never ass, but is always asted upon.....In the second case; this force is the influence of passion getting the better of reason; or the brute overpowering and conquering the will of the man.....In the third case; it is Human Authority in religion requiring conformity to particular modes of faith and worship, and superfeding private judgment.....And in the last case, it is any will distinct from that of the Majority of a Community, which claims a power of making laws for it, and disposing of its property.

This it is, I think, that marks the limit, or that lays the line between Liberty and Slavery. As far as, in any inflance, the operation of any caufe comes in to reftrain the power of Self-government, fo far Slavery is introduced: Nor do I think that a precifer idea than this of Liberty and Slavery can be formed.

I cannot help withing I could here fix my reader's attention, and engage him to confider carefully the dignity of that bleffing to which we give the name of LIBERTY, according to the reprefentation now made of it. There is not a word in the whole compass of language which expresses fo much of what is important and excellent. It is, in every view of it, a bleffing truly facred and invaluable .---- Without Physical Liberty, man would be a machine acted upon by mechanical fprings, having no principle of motion in himfelf, or command over events; and, therefore, incapable of all merit and demerit .-Without Moral Liberty he is a wicked and detestable being, fubject to the tyranny of bafe lufts, and the fport of every vile appetite. ---- And without Religious and Civil Liberty he is a poor and abject animal, without rights, without property, and without a confcience, bending his neck to the yoke, and crouching to the will of every filly creature who has the infolence to pretend to authority over him.---- Nothing, therefore, can be of fo much confequence to us as Liberty. It is the foundation of all honour, and the chief privilege and glory of our natures.

In fixing our ideas on the fubject of Liberty, it is of particular use to take such an enlarged view of it as 1 have now given. But the immediate object of the prefent enquiry being Civil Liberty, 1 will confine to it all the subsequent observations.

SECT. II. Of Civil Liberty and the Principles of Government.

F ROM what has been faid it is obvious, that all civil government, as far as it can be denominated free, is the creature of the people. It originates with them. It is conducted under their direction; and has in view nothing but their happinefs. All its different forms are no more than fo many different modes in which they chufe to direct their affairs, and to fecure the quiet enjoyment of their rights. In every free flate every man is his own Legiflator. All taxes are free-gifts for public fervices. All laws are particular provifions or regulations etablished by COMMON CONSENT for gaining protection and fafety. And all Magifrates are Truftees or Deputies for carrying thefe regulations into execution.

Liberty, therefore, is too imperfectly defined when it is faid to be "a Government by LAWS, and not by MEN." If the laws are made by one man, or a junto of men in a flate, and not by COMMON CONSENT, a government by them does not differ from Slavery. In this cafe it would be a contradiction in terms to fay that the flate governs itfelf.

From hence it is obvious that Civil Liberty, in its most perfect degree, can be enjoyed only in fmall states, where every member is capable of giving his suffrage in perfon, and of being chosen into public offices. When a state becomes so numerous, or when the different parts of it are removed to such distances from one another, as to render this impracticable, a diminution of Liberty necessarily arises. There are, however, in these circumstances, methods by which such near approaches may be made to perfect Liberty as shall answer all the purposes of government, and at the same time fecure every right of human nature.

Tho' all the members of a flate fhould not be capable of giving their fuffrages on public measures, individually and perfonally, they may do this by the appointment of Sulfitutes or Reprefentatives. They may entrush the powers of legislation, subject to such refirictions as they shall think necessary, with any number of Delegates; and whatever can be done by such delegates within the limits of their trush, may be confidered as done by the united voice and counfel of the Community.—In this method a free government may be established in the largest state; and it is conceivable that by regulations of this kind, any number of states might be subjected to a scheme of government, that would exclude the desolutions of war, and produce universal peace and order.

Let us think here of what may be practicable in this way with respect to Europe in particular. ----- While it continues divided, as it is at prefent, into a great number of independent kingdoms whose interests are continually clashing, it is impossible but that disputes will often arise which must end in war and carnage. It would be no remedy to this evil to make one of these states supreme over the reft ; and to give it an abfolute plenitude of power to fuperintend and controul them. This would be to fubject all the flates to the arbitrary difcretion of one, and to establish an ignominious flavery not possible to be long endured. It would, therefore, be a remedy worfe than the difease ; nor is it possible it should be approved by any mind that has not lost every idea of Civil Liberty. On the contrary .- Let every flate, with respect to all its internal concerns, be continued independent of all the reft ; and let a general confederacy be formed by the appointment of a SENATE confifting of Reprefentatives from all the different states. Let this SENATE possels the power of managing all the common concerns of the united flates, and of judging and deciding between them, as a common Arbiter or Umpire, in all difputes; having, at the fame time, under its direction, the common force of the flates to support its decisions.---- In these circumftances, each feparate flate would be fecure against the interference of foreign power in its private concerns, and, therefore, would poffers Liberty; and at the fame time it would be fecure against all oppression and infult from every neighbouring state. Thus might the scattered force and abilities of a whole continent be gathered into one point; all litigations settled as they role; univerfal peace preferved; and nation prevented from any more listing up a fourd against nation.

I have observed, that tho', in a great state, all the individuals that compose it cannot be admitted to an immediate participation in the powers of legislation and government, yet they may participate in these powers by a delegation of them to a body of representatives. In this case it is evident that the flate will be ftill free or felf-governed; and that it will be more or lefs fo in proportion as it is more or lefs fairly and adequately reprefented. If the perfons to whom the truft of government is committed hold their places for fhort terms ; if they are chosen by the unbiassed voices of a majority of the state, and subject to their inftructions : Liberty will be enjoyed in its highest degree. But if they are chosen for long terms by a part only of the flate; and if during that term they are fubject to no controul from their constituents ; the very idea of Liberty will be lost, and the power of chufing reprefentatives becomes nothing but a power, lodged in a few, to chuse at certain periods, a body of Masters for themselves and for the rest of the Community. And if a state is fo funk that the majority of its reprefentatives are elected by a handful of the meanest (a) persons in it, whose votes are always paid for ; and if alfo, there is a higher will on which even these mock representatives themselves depend, and that directs their voices : In these circumfances, it will be an abuse of language to fay that the flate possesses Liberty. Private men, indeed, might be allowed the exercise of Liberty ; as they might also under the most despotic government; but it would be an indulgence or connivance derived from the spirit of the times, or from an accidental mildness in the administration. And, rather than be governed in fuch a manner, it would perhaps be better to be governed by the will of one man without any representation : For a reprefentation fo degenerated could answer no other end than to mislead and deceive, by difguifing flavery, and keeping up a form of Liberty when the reality was loft.

Within the limits now mentioned, Liberty may be enjoyed in every polible degree; from that which is complete and perfect, to that which is merely nominal; according as the people have more or lefs of a share in government, and of a controuling power over the perfons by whom it is administered.

(a) In Great Britain, confiding of near fix millions of inhabitants, 5723 perfons, most of them the loweft of the people, electrone half of the Heafe of Commons; and 364 votes thuse a ninth part. This may be feen diffinely, mode out in the Poincical Difguistions, Vol. 1. Book 2. C. 4. a work full of important and uleful infruction. imposing taxes and originating supplies; the effentials of Liberty will be preferved.——We make it our boast in this country, that this is our own constitution. I will not fay with how much reason.

Of fuch Liberty as I have now described, it is impossible that there should be an excels. Government is an inflitution for the benefit of the people governed, which they have power to model as they pleafe; and to fay, that they can have too much of this power, is to fay, that there ought to be a power in the flate superior to that which gives it being, and from which all jurifdiction in it is derived .----Licentiousness, which has been commonly mentioned, as an extreme of liberty, is indeed its opposite. It is government by the will of rapacious individuals, in opposition to the will of the community, made known and declared in the laws. A free ftate, at the fame time that it is free itfelf, makes all its members free by excluding licentiousnels, and guarding their persons and property and good name against insult. It is the end of all just government, at the same time that it secures the liberty of the public against foreign injury, to fecure the liberty of the individual against private injury. I do not, therefore, think it strictly just to fay, that it belongs to the nature of government to entrench on private liberty. It ought never to do this, except as far as the exercise of private liberty encroaches on the liberties of others. That is ; it is licentiousness it restrains, and liberty itself only when used to deftroy liberty.

It appears from hence, that licentioufnefs and defpotifm are more nearly allied than is commonly imagined. They are both alike inconfistent with liberty, and the true end of government; nor is there any other difference between them, than that the one is the licentiousness of great men, and the other the licentiousness of little men; or that, by the one, the perfons and property of a people are subject to outrage and invasion from a King, or a lawles body of Grandees; and that, by the other, they are fubject to the like outrage from a lawless mob-In avoiding one of these evils, mankind have often run into the other. But all well-conflituted governments guard equally against both. Indeed of the two, the last is, on feveral accounts, the least to be dreaded, and has done the least mischief. It may be truly faid, that if licentiousnefs has deftroyed its thousands, despotism has destroyed its millions. The former, having little power, and no fyttem to fupport it, necessarily finds its own remedy; and a people foon get out of the tumult and anarchy attending it. But a despotism, wearing the form of government, and being armed with its force, is an evil not to be conquered without dreadful firuggles. It goes on from age to age, debasing the human faculties, levelling all diffinctions, and preying on the rights and bleffings of fociety .--- It deferves to be added, that in a state disturbed by licentiousness, there is an animation which is favourable to the human mind, and which puts it upon exerting its powers. But in a flate habituated to a despotism; all is still and torpid. A dark and favage tyranny fliffes every effort of genius ; and the mind lofes all its spirit and dignity.

Before I proceed to what I have farther in view, I will obferve, that the account now given of the principles of public Liberty, and the nature of an equal and free government, fhews what judgment we fhould form of that OMNIPOTENCE, which, it has been faid, muft belong to every government as fuch. Great firefs has been laid on this, but moft unreafonably.——Government, as has been before obferved, is, in the very nature of it, a TRUST; and all its powers a DELEGATION for gaining particular ends. This truft may be mifapplied and abufed. It may be employed to defeat the very ends for which it was inflituted; and to fubvert the very rights which it ought to protect.—— A PARLIAMENT, for inflance, confifting of a body of reprefentatives, chofen for a limited period, to make laws, and to grant money for public fervices, would forfeit its authority by making itfelf perpetual, or even prolonging its own own duration; by nominating its own members; by accepting bribes; or fubjecting itfelf to any kind of foreign influence. This would convert a Parliament into a conclave or junto of felf-created tools; and a flate that has loft its regard to its own rights, fo far as to fubmit to fuch a breach of truft in its rulers, is enflaved.—Nothing, therefore, can be more abfurd than the doctrine which fome have taught, with refpect to the omnipotence of parliaments. They posses no power beyond the limits of the truft for the execution of which they were formed. If they contradict this truft, they betray their conflituents, and diffolve themfelves. All delegated power must be fubordinate and limited.—If omnipotence can, with any fense, be afcribed to a legislature, it must be lodged where all legislative authority originates; that is, in the PEOPLE. For their fakes government is instituted; and their's is the only real omnipotence.

I am fenfible, that all I have been faying would be very abfurd, were the opinions just which fome have maintained concerning the origin of government. According to these opinions, government is not the creature of the people, or the refult of a convention between them and their rulers : But there are certain men who poffess in themselves, independently of the will of the people, a right of governing them, which they derive from the Deity. This doctrine has been abundantly refuted by many (a) excellent writers. It is a doctrine which avowedly fubverts Civil Liberty; and which reprefents mankind as a body of vafials, formed to descend like cattle from one set of owners to another, who have an absolute dominion over them. It is a wonder, that those who view their species in a light fo humiliating, fhould ever be able to think of themfelves without regret and fhame. The intention of these observations is not to oppose such fentiments; but, taking for granted the reasonableness of Civil Liberty, to shew wherein it confifts, and what diffinguishes it from its contrary .---- And, in confidering this fubject, as it has been now treated, it is unavoidable to reflect on the excellency of a free government, and its tendency to exalt the nature of man. ---- Every member of a free flate, having his property fecure, and knowing himfelf his own governor, poffeffes a confciousnels of dignity in himfelf, and feels incitements to emulation and improvement, to which the miferable flaves of arhitrary power must be utter strangers. In such a state all the springs of action have room to operate, and the mind is flimulated to the nobleft exertions (b) .--But to be obliged, from our birth, to look up to a creature no better than ourfelves as the mafter of our fortunes; and to receive his will as our law-What can be more humiliating ? What elevated ideas can enter a mind in fuch a fituation ?--- Agreeably to this remark ; the subjects of free states have, in all ages, been most diffinguished for genius and knowledge. Liberty is the foil where the arts and fciences have flourished; and the more free a flate has been, the more have the powers of the human mind been drawn forth into action, and the greater number of brave men has it produced. With what lufire do the antient free flates of Greece fhine in the annals of the world ? How different is that country now, under the Great Turk? The difference between a country inhabited by men, and by brutes, is not greater.

Thefe are reflexions which fhould be conflantly prefent to every mind in this country.—As Moral Liberty is the prime bleffing of man in his private capacity, fo is Civil Liberty in his public capacity. There is nothing that requires more to be swatched than power. There is nothing that ought to be oppofed with a more determined refolution than its encroachments. Sleep in a flate, as Montefquicu fays, is always followed by flavery.

The

The people of this kingdom were once warmed by fuch fentiments as thefe. Many a fycophant of power have they factificed. Often have they fought and bled in the caufe of Liberty. But that time feems to be going. The fair inheritance of Liberty left us by our anceftors many of us are not unwilling to refign. An abandoned venality, the infeparable companion of diffipation and extravagance, has poifoned the fprings of public virtue among us: And fhould any events ever arife that fhould render the fame oppofition neceffary that took place in the times of King Charles the First, and James the Second, I am afraid all that is valuable to us would be lost. The terror of the flanding army, the danger of the public funds, and the all-corrupting influence of the treafury, would deaden all zeal, and produce general acquiescence and fervility.

SECT. III. Of the Authority of one Country over another.

ROM the nature and principles of Civil Liberty, as they have been now explained, it is an immediate and percentage in fractional states and percentage in the state of the sta explained, it is an immediate and necessary inference, that no one community can have any power over the property or legislation of another community, that is not incorporated with it by a just and adequate representation .- Then only, it has been shewn, is a state free, when it is governed by its own will. But a country that is subject to the legislature of another country, in which it has no voice, and over which it has no controul, cannot be faid to be governed by its own will. Such a country, therefore, is in a flate of flavery. And it deferves to be particularly confidered, that fuch a flavery is worfe, on feveral accounts, than any flavery of private men to one another, or of kingdoms to despots within themselves .- Between one flate and another, there is none of that fellow-feeling that takes place between perfons in private life. Being detached bodies that never fee one another, and refiding perhaps in different quarters of the globe, the flate that governs cannot be a witnefs to the fufferings occasioned by its oppressions; or a competent judge of the circumstances and abilities of the people who are governed. They must also have in a great degree separate interests; and the more the one is loaded, the more the other may be eased. The infamy likewise of oppression, being in such circumstances shared among a multitude, is not likely to be much felt or regarded .---- On all these accounts there is, in the cafe of one country fubjugated to another, little or nothing to check rapacity; and the most flagrant injustice and cruelty may be practifed without remorfe or pity .____ I will add, that it is particularly difficult to shake off a tyranny of this kind. A fingle despot, if a people are unanimous and resolute, may be soon subdued. But a despotic state is not easily subdued; and a people subject to it cannot emancipate themselves without entering into a dreadful, and, perhaps, very unequal contest.

I cannot help observing farther, that the flavery of a people to internal defpots may be qualified and limited; but I don't see what can limit the authority of one state over another. The exercise of power in this case can have no other measure than discretion; and, therefore, must be indefinite and absolute.

Once more. It should be confidered that the government of one country by another, can only be supported by a military force; and, without such a support, must be defitute of all weight and efficiency.

This will be best explained by putting the following case. ——— There is, let us suppose, in a province subject to the fovereignty of a distant flate, a subordinate legislature confisting of an Assembly chosen by the people; a Council chosen by that Assembly; and a Governor appointed by the Sovereign State, and paid by the Province. There are likewise, judges and other officers, appointed and paid in the same manner, for administering justice agreeably to the laws, by the verdicts of juries fairly and indiscriminately chosen. — This forms a constitution feemingly free, by giving the people a share in their own government, and fome check on their rulers. But, while there is a higher legiflative power, to the controul of which fuch a conflitution is fubject, it does not itfelf poffefs Liberty, and therefore, cannot be of any use as a fecurity to Liberty; nor is it poffible that it should be of long duration. Laws offenfive to the Province will be enacted by the Sovereign State. The legislature of the Province will remon-ftrate against them. The magistrates will not execute them. Juries will not convict upon them; and confequently, like the Pope's Bulls which once governed Europe, they will become nothing but forms and empty founds, to which no regard will be fhewn. ---- In order to remedy this evil, and to give efficiency to its government, the fupreme flate will naturally be led to withdraw the Governor, the Council, and the Judges (a) from the controul of the Province, by making them entirely dependent on itself for their pay and continuance in office, as well as for their appointment. It will also alter the mode of chusing Juries on purpose to bring them more under its influence : And in some cases, under the pretence of the impossibility of gaining an impartial trial where government is refifted, it will perhaps ordain, that offenders shall be removed from the Province to be tried within its own territories : And it may even go fo far in this kind of policy, as to endeavour to prevent the effects of discontents, by forbidding all meetings and affociations of the people, except at fuch times, and for such particular purposes, as shall be permitted them.

Thus will fuch a Province be exactly in the fame ftate that Britain would be in, were our first executive magistrate, our Houfe of Lords, and our Judges, nothing but the instruments of a foreign democratical power; were our Juries nominated by that power; or were we liable to be transported to a distant country to be tried for offences committed here; and restrained from calling any meetings, confulting about any grievances, or affociating for any purposes, except when leave should be given us by a Lord Lieutenant or Viceroy.

It is certain that this is a flate of opprefilion which no country could endure, and to which it would be vain to expect, that any people flould fubmit an hour without an armed force to compel them.

The late transactions in Maffachufett's Bay are a perfect exemplification of what I have now faid. The government of Great Britain in that Province has gone on exactly in the train I have defcribed; till at last it became necessary to station troops there, not amenable to the civil power; and all terminated in a government by the Sword. And such, if a people are not such below the character of men, will be the issue of all government in similar circumstances.

It may be asked ----- " Are there not causes by which one state may acquire a " rightful authority over another, though not consolidated by an adequate Re-

(a) The independency of the Judges we effect in this country one of our greateft privileges. Before the revolution they generally, I believe, held their places during plaqure. King William gave them their places during good behaviour. At the accefion of the prefent Royal Family their places were given them during good behaviour, in confequence of the Aft of Settlement, 12 and 13 W. III. C. 2. But an opinion having been entertained by fome, that though their commiffions were made under the Aft of Settlement to continue, during good behaviour, yet that they determined on the demife of the Crown; it was enafted by a flatute made in the first year of his prefent Majefty, Chap. 23. "That the commiffions of Judges for the time being fhall be, continue, and remain in "fullforce, during their good behaviour, notwithftanding the demife of his Majefty, his Heirs and "Succeffors, to remove any Judge upon the addrefs of both Houfes of Parliament." And by the fame Statute their falaries are fecured to them during the continuance of their commiffions : His Majefty, according to the preamble of the Statute, having been pleafed to declare from the Throne to both Houfes of Parliament, " That he looked upon the independency and uprightnefs of Judges as " effontial to the impartial administration of Juffice, as one of the beft fecurities to the Rights and " Liberties of his loving fubjects, and as moft conducive to the honour of his Crown."

A worthy friend and able Lawyer has fupplied me with this note. It affords, when contrafted with that dependence of the Judges which has been thought reafonable in America, a fad fpecimen of the different manner is which a kingdom may think proper to govern itfelf, and the provinces fubject to it. " prefentation ?"----- I answer, that there are no such causes. ---- All the causes to which such an effect can be ascribed are CONQUEST, COMPACT, or OBLI-GATIONS CONFERRED.

Much has been faid of the right of conquest; and history contains little more than accounts of kingdoms reduced by it under the dominion of other kingdoms, and of the havock it has made among mankind. But the authority derived from hence, being founded on violence, is never rightful. The Roman Republic was nothing but a faction against the general liberties of the world; and had no more right to give law to the Provinces subject to it, than thieves have to the property they feize, or to the houses into which they break.——Even in the case of a just war undertaken by one people to defend itself against the oppressions of another people, conquest gives only a right to an indemnification for the injury which occasioned the war, and a reasonable fecurity against future injury.

Neither can any flate require fuch an authority over other flates in virtue of. any compacts or ceffions. This is a cafe in which compacts are not binding. Civil Liberty is, in this respect, on the fame footing with Religious Liberty. As no people can lawfully furrender their Religious Liberty, by giving up their. right of judging for themfelves in religion, or by allowing any human beings to prefcribe to them what faith they shall embrace, or what mode of worship they shall practife; fo neither can any civil focieties lawfully furrender their Civil Liberty, by giving up to any extraneous jurisdiction their power of legiflating for themfelves and disposing their property. Such a ceffion, being inconfistent with the unalienable rights of human nature, would either not bind at all : or bind only the individuals who made it. This is a bleffing which no one generation of men can give up for another; and which, when loft, a people have always a right to refume. ---- Had our anceftors in this country been fo mad as to have subjected themselves to any foreign Community, we could not have been under any obligation to continue in fuch a flate. And all the nations now in the world who, in confequence of the tamenefs and folly of their predecessors, are subject to arbitrary power, have a right to emancipate themselves as foon as they can.

If neither conquest nor compact can give fuch an authority, much lefs can any favours received, or any fervices performed by one flate for another. — Let the favour received be what it will, Liberty is too dear a price for it. A flate that has been obliged is not, therefore, bound to be enslaved. It ought, if possible, to make an adequate return for the fervices done to it; but to suppose that it ought to give up the power of governing itself, and the disposal of its property, would be to suppose, that, in order to shew its gratitude, it ought to part with the power of ever afterwards exercising gratitude. — How much has been done by this kingdom for Hanover? But no one will fay that on this account, we have a right to make the laws of Hanover; or even to draw a single penny from it without its own confent.

After what has been faid it will, I am afraid, be trifling to apply the preceding arguments to the cafe of different communities, which are confidered as different parts of the fame Empire. But there are reafons which render it neceifary for me to be explicit in making this application.

What I mean here is just to point out the difference of fituation between communities forming an Empire; and particular bodies or classes of men forming different parts of a Kingdom. Different communities forming an Empire have no connexions, which produce a necessary reciprocation of interests between them. They inhabit different diffricts, and are governed by different legislatures. On the contrary. The different classes of men within a kingdom are all placed on the fame ground. Their concerns and interests are the fame; and what is done to one part must affect all. — These are fituations totally different; and a conflictuion conflitution of government that may be confiftent with Liberty in one of them, may be entirely inconfiftent with it in the other. It is, however, certain that, even in the laft of thefe fituations, no one part ought to govern the reft. In order to a fair and equal government, there ought to be a fair and equal reprefentation of all that are governed; and as far as this is wanting in any government, it deviates from the principles of Liberty, and becomes unjuft and oppreflive.— But in the circumftances of different communities, all this holds with unfpeakably more force. The government of a part in this cafe becomes complete tyranny; and fubjection to it becomes complete flavery.

But ought there not, it is afked, to exift fomewhere in an Empire a fupreme legiflative authority over the whole; or a power to controul and bind all the different flates of which it confifts?——This enquiry has been already anfwered. The truth is, that fuch a fupreme controuling power ought to exift no-where except in fuch a SENATE or body of delegates as that defcribed in page 7; and that the authority or fupremacy of even this fenate ought to be limited to the common concerns of the Empire.——I think I have proved that the fundamental principles of Liberty neceffarily require this.

In a word. An Empire is a collection of flates or communities united by fome common bond or tye. If these flates have each of them free conflictions of government, and, with refpect to taxation and internal legiflation, are independent of the other flates, but united by compacts, or alliances, or fubjection to a Great Council, representing the whole, or to one monarch entrusted with the supreme executive power: In these circumfances, the Empire will be an Empire of Freemen.----If, on the contrary, like the different provinces subject to the Grand Seignior, none of the flates poffels any independent legiflative authority ; but are all fubject to an absolute monarch, whose will is their law, then is the Empire an Empire of Slaves.------If one of the flates is free, but governs by its will all the other flates ; then is the Empire, like that of the Romans in the times of the republic, an Empire confifting of one flate free, and the reft in flavery : Nor does it make any more difference in this cafe, that the governing state is itself free, than it does in the cafe of a kingdom fubject to a despot, that this despot is himself free. I have before observed, that this only makes the flavery worse. There is, in the one cafe, a chance, that in the quick fucceffion of despots, a good one will sometimes arife. But bodies of men continue the fame ; and have generally proved the most unrelenting of all tyrants.

A great writer before (a) quoted, obferves of the Roman Empire, that while Liberty was at the center, tyranny prevailed in the diffant provinces; that fuch as were free under it were extremely fo, while those who were flaves groaned under the extremity of flavery; and that the fame events that defireyed the liberty of the former, gave liberty to the latter.

The Liberty of the Romans, therefore, was only an additional calamity to the provinces governed by them; and though it might have been faid of the citizens of Rome, that they were the "freeft members of any civil fociety in the known "world;" yet of the fubjets of Rome, it must have been faid, that they were the completeft flaves in the known world. —— How remarkable is it, that this very people, once the freeft of mankind, but at the fame time the most proud and tyrannical, fhould become at last the most contemptible and abject flaves that ever existed?

PART II.

I N the foregoing difquifitions, I have, from one leading principle, deduced a number of confequences, that feems to me incapable of being difputed. I have meant that they fhould be applied to the great queftion between this kingdom and the Colonies which has occasioned the prefent war with them.

It is impoffible but my readers must have been all along making this application; and if they flill think that the claims of this kingdom are reconcilable to the principles of true liberty and legitimate government, I am afraid, that nothing I fhall farther fay will have any effect on their judgments. I wifh, however, they would have the patience and candour to go with me, and grant me a hearing fome time longer.

Though clearly decided in my own judgment on this fubject, I am inclined to make great allowances for the different judgments of others. We have been fo ufed to fpeak of the Colonies as our Colonies, and to think of them as in a flate of fubordination to us, and as holding their existence in America only for our ufe, that it is no wonder the prejudices of many are alarmed, when they find a different doctrine maintained. The meaneft perfon among us is difpofed to look upon himfelf as having a body of fubjects in America; and to be offended at the denial of his right to make laws for them, though perhaps he does not know what colour they are of, or what language they talk—Such are the natural prejudices of this country.—But the time is coming, I hope, when the unreafonablenefs of them will be feen; and more juft fentiments prevail.

Before I proceed, I beg it may be attended to, that I have chosen to try this queffion by the general principles of Civil Liberty ; and not by the practice of former times; or by the Charters granted the colonies .---- The arguments for them, drawn from these last topics, appear to me greatly to outweigh the arguments against them. But I wish to have this question brought to a higher test, and furer iffue. The queftion with all liberal enquirers ought to be, not what jurisdiction over them Precedents, Statutes, and Charters give, but what reason and equity, and the rights of humanity give .--- This is, in truth, a queftion which no kingdom has ever before had occasion to agitate. The case of a free country branching itself out in the manner Britain has done, and fending to a diftant world colonies which have there, from fmall beginnings, and under free legiflatures of their own, increased, and formed a body of powerful flates, likely foon to become fuperior to the parent flate-This is a cafe which is new in the history of mankind ; and it is extremely improper to judge of it by the rules of any narrow and partial policy; or to confider it on any other ground than the general one of reason and juffice.—. Those who will be candid enough to judge on this ground, and who can divest themselves of national prejudices, will not, I fancy, remain long unfatisfied.____But alas! Matters are gone too far. The difpute probably must be fettled another way ; and the fword alone, I am afraid, is now to determine what the rights of Britain and America are .--- Shocking fituation !- Detefted be the measures which have brought us into it : And, if we are endeavouring to enforce injuffice, curfed will be the war. _____A retreat, however, is not yet impracticable. The duty we owe our gracious fovereign obliges us to rely on his disposition to flay the fword, and to promote the happinefs of all the different parts of the Empire at the head of which he is placed. With fome hopes, therefore, that it may not be too late to reason on this subject, I will, in the following Sections, enquire what the war with America is in the following respects.

SECT. I. Of the Justice of the War with America.

HE enquiry, whether the war with the Colonies is a just war, will be beft determined by flating the power over them, which it is the end of the war to maintain : And this cannot be better done, than in the words of an act of parliament, made on purpole to define it. That act, it is well known, declares, "That this kingdom has power, and of right ought to have power to "make laws and flatutes to bind the Colonies, and people of America, in all "cafes whatever." Dreadful power indeed ! I defy any one to exprefs flavery in flronger language. It is the fame with declaring "that we have a "right to do with them what we pleafe." I will not wafte my time by applying to fuch a claim any of the preceding arguments. If my reader does not feel more in this cafe, than words can exprefs, all reafoning muft be vain.

But, probably, most perfons will be for using milder language; and for faying no more than, that the united legislatures of England and Scotland have of right power to tax the Colonies, and a supremacy of legislation over America. — But this comes to the fame. If it means any thing, it means, that the property, and the legislations of the Colonies, are support to the absolute difference of Great Britain, and ought of right to be so. The nature of the thing admits of no limitation. The Colonies can never be admitted to be judges, how far the authority over them in these cases shall extend. This would be to deftroy it entirely.— If any part of their property is subject to our difference, the whole must be so. If we have a right to interfere at all in their internal legislations, we have a right to interfere as far as we think proper.— It is felf-evident, that this leaves them nothing they can call their our. And what is it that can give to any people such a supremacy over another people?—I have already examined the principal answer which have been given to this enquiry. But it will not be amiss in this place to go over some of them again.

It has been urged, that fuch a right must be lodged somewhere, " in order to " preferve the UNITY of the British Empire."

Much has been faid of "the Superiority of the British State." But what gives us our superiority?—Is it our Wealth?—This never confers real dignity. On the contrary : Its effect is always to debase, intoxicate, and corrupt.— Is it the number of our people? The colonies will soon be equal to us in number.— Is it our Knowledge and Virtue? They are probably equally knowing, and more virtuous. There are names among them that will not floop to any names among the philosophers and politicians of this island.

" But we are the PARENT STATE."-These are the magic words which have fascinated and misled us. ____ The English came from Germany. Does that give the German states a right to tax us ?---Children, having no property, and being incapable of guiding themselves, the Author of nature has committed the care of them to their parents, and fubjected them to their absolute authority. But there is a period when, having acquired property, and a capacity of judging for themfelves, they become independent agents ; and when, for this reason, the authority of their parents ceafes, and becomes nothing but the refpect and influence due to benefactors. Supposing, therefore, that the order of nature in establishing the relation between parents and children, ought to have been the rule of our conduct to the Colonies, we should have been gradually relaxing our authority as they grew up. But, like mad parents, we have done the contrary ; and, at the very time when our authority should have been most relaxed, we have carried it to the greatest extent, and exercised it with the greatest rigour. No wonder then, that they have turned upon us; and obliged us to remember, that they are not Children.

" But we have," it is faid, " protected them, and run deeply in debt on their " account."---The full answer to this has been already given, (page 13.) Will any one fay, that all we have done for them has not been more on our cruiz account, (a) than on theirs? — But suppose the contrary. Have they done nothing for us ? Have they made no-compensation for the protection they have received ? Have they not helped us to pay our taxes, to fupport our poor, and to bear the burthen of our debts, by taking from us, at our own price, all the commodities with which we can fupply them? — Have they not, for our advantage, fubmitted to many reftraints in acquiring property ? Muft they likewife refign to us the disposal of that property ?- Has not their exclusive trade with us been for many years one of the chief fources of our national wealth and power ?-In all our wars have they not fought by our fide, and contributed much to our fuccefs ? In the laft war, particularly, it is well known, that they ran themfelves deeply in debt; and that the parliament thought it neceffary to grant them confiderable fums annually as compensations for going beyond their abilities in affifting us. And in this courfe would they have continued for many future years ; perhaps, for ever .-- In fhort ; were an accurate account flated, it is by no means certain which fide would appear to be most indebted. When asked as freemen, they have hitherto feldom discovered any reluctance in giving. But, in obedience to a demand, and with the bayonet at their breafts, they will give us nothing but blood.

It is farther faid, " that the land on which they fettled was ours."—But how came it to be ours? If failing along a coaft can give a right to a country, then might the people of Japan become, as foon as they pleafe, the proprietors of Britain. Nothing can be more chimerical than property founded on fuch a reafon. If the land on which the Colonies first fettled had any proprietors, they were the natives. The greatest part of it they bought of the natives. They

(a) This is particularly true of the bounties granted on fome American commodities (as pitch, tar, indigo, &c.) when imported into Britain; for it is well known, that the end of granting them was, to get those commodities cheaper from the Colonies, and in return for our manufactures, which we used to get from Refia and other foreign countries. And this is expressed in the preambles of the laws which grant these bounties. See the Appeal to the Juffice, &c. page 21, third edition. It is, therefore, farange that Doctor TUCKER and others, thould have infitted for much upon these bounties as favours and indugences to the Colonies.— Dut it is full more farange, that the fame representation should have been made of the compensations granted them for doing more during the laft war in affifting us than could have been reafonably expected; and also of the fums we have fpent in maintaining troops among them withes.— See a pamphlet, intitled " The rights of Great Britain afferted against the claims of " America."

have fince cleared and cultivated it; and, without any help from us, converted a wildernefs into fruitful and pleafant fields. It is, therefore, now on a double account their property; and no power on earth can have any right to difturb them in the pofferfion of it, or to take from them, without their confent, any part of its produce.

But let it be granted that the land was ours. Did they not fettle upon it under the faith of charters, which promifed them the enjoyment of all the rights of Englishmen; and allowed them to tax themselves, and to be governed by legislatures of their own, fimilar to ours ? These charters were given them by an authority, which at the time was thought competent; and they have been rendered facred by an acquiescence on our part for more than a century. Can it then be wondered at, that the Colonies should revolt, when they found their charters violated; and an attempt made to force INNOVATIONS upon them by famine and the fword ?-But I lay no ftrefs on charters. They derive their rights from a higher fource. It is inconfiftent with common fense to imagine. that any people would ever think of fettling in a diftant country, on any fuch condition, as that the people from whom they withdrew, fhould for ever be mafters of their property, and have power to subject them to any modes of government they pleafed. And had there been express stipulations to this purpose in all the charters of the colonies, they would, in my opinion, be no more bound by them, than if it had been flipulated with them, that they fhould go naked, or expose themfelves to the incursions of wolves and tigers.

The defective flate of the reprefentation of this kingdom has been farther pleaded to prove our right to tax America. We fubmit to a parliament that does not reprefent us, and therefore they ought.—How firange an argument is this? It is faying we want liberty; and therefore, they ought to want it.— Suppofe it true, that they are indeed contending for a better conflictution of government, and more liberty than we enjoy: Ought this to make us angry? —Who is there that does not fee the danger to which this country is expofed?—Is it generous, becaufe we are in a fink, to endcavour to draw them into it? Ought we not rather to wifh earnefly, that there may at leaft be ONE FREE COUNTRY left upon earth, to which we may fly, when venality, luxury, and vice have completed the ruin of Liberty here?

It is, however, by no means true, that America has no more right to be exempted from taxation by the British parliament, than Britain itself.----Here, all freeholders, and burgeffes in boroughs, are represented. There, not one Freeholder, or any other perfon, is reprefented .- Here, the aids granted by the reprefented part of the kingdom mult be proportionably paid by themfelves; and the laws they make for others, they at the fame time make for themfelves. There, the aids they would grant would not be puid, but received, by themfelves; and the laws they made would be made for others only. --- In fhort. The relation of one country to another country, whose representatives have the power of taxing it (and of appropriating the money railed by the taxes) is much the fame with the relation of a country to a fingle defpot, or a body of despots, within itself, invested with the like power. In both cases, the people taxed and those who tax have separate interests; nor can there be any thing to check oppression, besides either the abilities of the people taxed, or the humanity of the taxers. ---- But indeed I can never hope to convince that perfon of any thing, who does not see an essential difference (a) between the two cases now mentioned; or between the circumstances of individuals, and classes of men, making parts of a community imperfectly represented in the legislature

(a) It gives me pleafure to find, that the author of the Remarks on the Principal Asts of the 13th Parliament of Great Britain, &c. acknowledges this difference.——It has, however, been at the fame time mortifying to me to find fo able a writer adopting fuch principles of government, as are contained in this work. According to him, a people have no property or rights, except fuch as their Civil Governors are pleafed not to take from them. Taxes, therefore, he afferts, are in no fende the gifts, much lefs the free gifts of the people. See p. 58, and 191. that governs it; and the circumstances of a whole community, in a distant world, not at all reprefented.

But enough has been faid by others on this point; nor is it possible for me to throw any new light upon it. To finish, therefore, what I meant to offer under this head, I must beg that the following considerations may be particularly attended to.

The quefinon now between us and the Colonies is, Whether, in respect of taxation and internal legislation, they are bound to be subject to the jurisdiction of this kingdom: Or, in other words, Whether the British parliament has or has not of right a power to dispose of their property, and to model as it pleases their governments? — To this supremacy over them, we fay, we are entitled; and in order to maintain it, we have begun the prefent war. — Let me here enquire,

1/f. Whether, if we have now this fupremacy, we fhall not be equally entitled to it in any future time ?—— They are now but little fhort of half our number. To this number they have grown, from a fmall body of original fettlers, by a very rapid increafe. The probability is, that they will go on to increafe; and that, in 50 or 60 years, they will be double our number; (a) and form a mighty Empire, confifting of a variety of flates, all equal or fuperior to ourfelves in all the arts and accomplifhments, which give dignity and happinefs to human life. In that period, will they be flill bound to acknowledge that fupremacy over them which we now claim ? Can there be any perfon who will affert this; or whofe mind does not revolt at the idea of a vaft continent, holding all that is valuable to it, at the difcretion of a handful of people on the other fide the Atlantic?— But if, at that period, this would be unreafonable; what makes it otherwife now?—Draw the line, if you can.—But there is a flill greater difficulty.

Britain is now, I will suppose, the feat of Liberty and Virtue; and its legiflature confifts of a body of able and independent men, who govern with wifdom and justice. The time may come when all will be reverfed : When its excellent conflitution of Government will be fubverted : When, preffed by debts and taxes, it will be greedy to draw to itfelf an increase of revenue from every distant Province, in order to ease its own burdens : When the influence of the crown. ftrengthened by luxury and an universal profligacy of manners, will have tainted every heart, broken down every fence of Liberty, and rendered us a nation of tame and contented vaffals : When a General Election will be nothing but a General Aution of Boroughs: And when the PARLIAMENT, the Grand Council of the nation, and once the faithful guardian of the state, and a terror to evil ministers, will be degenerated into a body of Sycophants, dependent and venal, always ready to confirm any measures; and little more than a public court for registering royal edicts .- Such, it is possible, may, fome time or other, be the flate of Great Britain .- What will, at that period, be the duty of the Colonies? Will they be still bound to unconditional submission? Must they always continue an appendage to our government; and follow it implicitly through every change that can happen to it ?-Wretched condition, indeed, of millions of freemen as good as ourfelves !- Will you fay that we now govern equitably; and that there is no danger of any fuch revolution ?---Would to God this were true !- But will you not always fay the fame ? Who shall judge whether we govern equitably or not? Can you give the Colonies any fecurity that fuch a period will never come? Once more.

If we have indeed that power which we claim over the legiflations, and internal rights of the Colonies, may we not, whenever we pleafe, fubject them to the arbitrary power of the crown ?-I do not mean, that this would be a difadvantageous change: For I have before obferved, that if a people are to be subject to an external power over which they have no command, it is better that power fhould be lodged in the hands of one man than of a multitude. But many perfons think otherwife; and fuch ought to confider that, if this would be a calamity, the condition of the Colonies must be deplorable .--- " A govern-" ment by King, Lords, and Commons, (it has been faid) is the perfection of go-" vernment;" and fo it is, when the Commons are a just representation of the people; and when alfo, it is not extended to any diftant people, or communities, not represented. But if this is the best, a government by a king only must be the worst; and every claim implying a right to establish fuch a government among any people must be unjust and cruel.-It is felf-evident, that by claiming a right to alter the conflitutions of the Colonies, according to our diferetion, we claim this power : And it is a power that we have thought fit to exercife in one of our Colonies; and that we have attempted to exercise in another .- Canada, according to the late extension of its limits, is a country almost as large as half Europe; and it may possibly come in time to be filled with British fubjects. The Quebec act makes the king of Great Britain a defpot over all that country .-In the Province of Maffachufett's Bay the fame thing has been attempted and begun.

The act for BETTER regulating their government, paffed at the fame time with the Quebec act, gives the king the right of appointing, and removing at his pleafure, the members of one part of the legiflature; alters the mode of chufing juries, on purpofe to bring it more under the influence of the king; and takes away from the province the power of calling any meetings of the people without the king's confent. (a) — The judges, likewife, have been made dependent on the king, for their nomination and pay, and continuance in office.— If all this is no more than we have a right to do; may we not go on to abolifh the houfe of reprefentatives, to defroy all trials by juries, and to give up the province abfolutely and totally to the will of the king? — May we not even eftablifh popery in the province, as has been lately done in Canada, leaving the fupport of proteflantifin to the king's difference?—Can there be any Englifhman who, were it his own cafe, would not fooner lofe his heart's blood than yield to claims fo pregnant with evils, and deflructive to every thing that can diffinguifh a Freeman from a Slave?

I will take this opportunity to add, that what I have now faid, fuggefts a confideration that demonstrates, on how different a footing the Colonies are with refpect to our government, from particular bodies of men within the kingdom, who happen not to be represented. Here, it is impossible that the represented part should fubject the unrepresented part to arbitrary power, without including themselves. But in the Colonies it is not impossible. We know that it has been done.

SECT. II. Whether the War with America is justified by the Principles of the Constitution.

Have proposed, in the next place, to examine the war with the Colonies by the principles of the confliction.—I know, that it is common to fay that we are now maintaining the confliction in America. If this means that we are endeavouring to establish our own confliction of government there; it is by no means true; nor, were it true, would it be right. They have chartered governments of their own, with which they are pleased; and which, if any power on earth may change without their confent, that power may likewife, if it thinks proper, deliver them over to the Grand Seignior.—Suppose the Colonies of Frarce and Spain had, by compacts, enjoyed for near a century and a half, free governments open to all the world, and under which they had grown and flourifhed; what fhould we think of those kingdoms, were they to attempt to deflroy their governments, and to force upon them their own mode of government? Should we not applaud any zeal they discovered in repelling such an injury? — But the truth is, in the present inflance, that we are not maintaining but violating our own confliction in America. The effence of our conflitution confists in its independency. There is in this case no difference between subjection and annibilation. Did, therefore, the Colonies possible governments perfectly the same with ours, the attempt to subject them to ours would be an attempt to ruin them. A free government loses its nature from the moment it becomes liable to be commanded or altered by any superior power.

But I intended here principally to make the following observation.

The fundamental principle of our government is, "The right of a people to "give and grant their own money."——It is of no confequence, in this cafe, whether we enjoy this right in a proper manner or not. Moft certainly we do not. It is, however, the principle on which our government, as a free government, is founded. The fpirit of the conflitution gives it us: and, however imperfectly enjoyed, we glory in it as our first and greatest blessing. It was an attempt to encroach upon this right, in a trifling inflance, that produced the civil war in the reign of Charles the First. Ought not our brethren in America to enjoy this right as well as ourfelves? Do the principles of the conflitution give it us, but deny it to them? Or can we, with any decency, pretend that when we give to the king their money, we give him our own? (a)——What difference does it make, that in the time of Charles the First the attempt to take away this right was made by one man: but that, in the case of America, it is made by a body of men?

In a word. This is a war undertaken not only against the prisciples of our own constitution; but on purpose to destroy other similar constitutions in America; and to substitute in their room a military force. See page 12.——It is, therefore, a gross and flagrant violation of the constitution.

SECT. III. Of the Policy of the War with America.

IN writing the prefent Section, I have entered upon a fubject of the laft importance, on which much has been faid by other writers with great force, and in the ableft manner (b). But I am not willing to omit any topic which I think of great confequence, merely becaufe it has already been difcuffed : And, with refpect to this in particular, it will, I believe, be found that fome of the obfervations on which I shall infift, have not been fufficiently attended to.

The object of this war has been often enough declared to be "maintaining the "fupremacy of this country over the colonies." I have already enquired how far reafon and juffice, the principles of Liberty, and the rights of humanity, entitle us to this fupremacy. Setting afide, therefore, now all confiderations of this kind, I would obferve, that this fupremacy is to be maintained, either merely for its own fake, or for the fake of fome public interest connected with it and

⁽a) The author of Taxation no Tyranry will undoubtedly affert this without hefitation; for in page 69 he compares our prefent fitution with respect to the Colonies to that of the antient Scythians, who, upon returning from a war found themselves sput out of their own Houses by their SLAVES.

⁽b) See particularly, a Speech intended to have been fpoken on the bill for altering the Charter of the Colony of Maffachufet's Bay; the Confiderations on the Measures carrying on with respect to the British Colonies; the Two Appeals to the Jussice and Interests of the People; and the further Examination (just published) of our present American Measures, by the Author of the Confiderations, &c.

and dependent upon it.---- If for its own fake ; the only object of the war is the extension of dominion ; and its only motive is the luft of power. _____All government, even within a state, becomes tyrannical, as far as it is a needless and wanton exercife of power; or is carried farther than is abfolutely neceffary to preferve the peace and to fecure the fafety of the ftate. This is what an excellent writer calls GOVERNING TOO MUCH; and its effect must always be, weakening government by rendering it contemptible and odious. - Nothing can be of more importance, in governing diftant provinces and adjusting the clashing interefts of different focieties, than attention to this remark. In these circumstances it is particularly neceffary to make a fparing use of power, in order to preferve power.—Happy would it have been for Great Britain, had this been remem-bered by those who have lately conducted its affairs. But our policy has been of another kind. At the period when our authority fhould have been most concealed, it has been brought most in view; and, by a progression of violent measures, every one of which has increased distress, we have given the world reason to conclude, that we are acquainted with no other method of governing than by force .-What a flocking miftake ?---If our object is power, we flould have known better how to use it; and our rulers should have confidered, that freemen will always revolt at the fight of a naked fword ; and that the complicated affairs of a great kingdom, holding in fubordination to it a multitude of diftant communities, all jealous of their rights, and warmed with spirits as high as our own, require not only the most skilful, but the most cautious and tender management. The confequences of a different management we are now feeling. We fee ourfelves driven among rocks, and in danger of being loft.

There are the following reafons which feem to make it too probable, that the prefent conteft with America is a conteft for power only (a), abstracted from all the advantages connected with it.

1st. There is a love of power inherent in human nature; and it cannot be uncharitable to suppose that the nation in general, and the cabinet in particular, are too likely to be influenced by it. What can be more flattering than to look across the Atlantic, and to see in the boundless continent of America, increasing MILLIONS whom we have a right to order as we please, who hold their property at our disposal, and who have no other law than our will? With what complacency have we been used to talk of them as our subjects?-----Is it not the interruption they now give to this pleafure? Is it not the opposition they make to our pride; and not any injury they have done us, that is the fecret fpring of our prefent animofity against them ?----- I wish all in this kingdom would examine themselves carefully on this point. Perhaps, they might find, that they have not known what fpirit they are of .-- Perhaps, they would become fenfible, that it was a fpirit of domination, more than a regard to the true interest of this country, that lately led fo many of them, with fuch favage folly, to addrefs the throne for the flaughter of their brethren in America, if they will not fubmit to them; and to make offers of their lives and fortunes for that purpole.---Indeed, I am perfuaded, that, were pride and the luft of dominion exterminated from every heart among us, and the humility of Christians infused in their room, this quarrel would be foon ended.

adly. Another reason for believing that this is a contest for power only is, that our ministers have frequently declared, that their object is not to draw a revenue from America; and that many of those who are warmest for continuing it, reprefent the American trade as of no great confequence.

(a) I have heard it faid by a perfon in one of the first departments of the flate, that the prefent contest is for DOMINION on the fide of the Colonies, as well as on ours: And fo it is, indeed; but with this effential difference. We are ftruggling for dominion over OTHERS. They are ftruggling for SELF-dominion: The nobleft of all bleffings.

But

But what deferves particular confideration here is, that this is a contell from which no advantages can poffibly be derived.——Not a revenue : For the provinces of America, when defolated, will afford no revenue ; or if they fhould, the expence of fubduing them and keeping them in fubjection will much exceed that revenue. ——Not any of the advantages of trade: For it is a folly, next to infanity, to think trade can be promoted by impoverifhing our cuftomers, and fixing in their minds an everlafting abhorrence of us.—It remains, therefore, that this war can have no other object than the extension of power.—Miferable reflection ! ——To fheath our fwords in the bowels of our brethren, and fpread mifery and ruin among a happy people, for no other end than to oblige them to acknowledge our fupremacy. How horrid !—This is the curfed ambition that led a Cafar and an Alexander, and many other mad conquerors, to attack peaceful communities, and to lay wafte the earth.

But a worfe principle than even this, influences fome among us. Pride and the love of dominion are principles hateful enough; but blind refentment and the defire of revenge are infernal principles : And these, I am afraid, have no small fhare at prefent in guiding our public conduct. ---- One cannot help indeed being aftonished at the virulence, with which some speak on the present occasion against the Colonies .---- For, what have they done ?-- Have they crossed the ocean and invaded us? Have they attempted to take from us the fruits of our labour, and to overturn that form of government which we hold fo facred ?---This cannot be pretended.-On the contrary. This is what we have done to them .---- We have transported ourfelves to their peaceful retreats, and employed our fleets and armies to flop up their ports, to deftroy their commerce, to feize their effects, and to burn their towns. Would we but let them alone, and fuffer them to enjoy in fecurity their property and governments, inftead of diffurbing us, they would thank and blefs us. And yet it is WE who imagine ourfelves illufed.____The truth is, we expected to find them a cowardly rabble who would lie quietly at our feet ; and they have disappointed us. They have risen in their own defence, and repelled force by force. They deny the plenitude of our power over them; and infift upon being treated as free communities.----- It is THIS that has provoked us; and kindled our governors into rage.

I hope I shall not here be understood to intimate, that all who promote this war are actuated by these principles. Some, I doubt not, are influenced by no other principle, than a regard to what they think the just authority of this country over its colonies, and to the unity and indivisibility of the British Empire. I wifh fuch could be engaged to enter thoroughly into the enquiry, which has been the fubject of the first part of this pamphlet; and to confider, particularly, how different a thing maintaining the authority of government within a state is from maintaining the authority of one people over another, already happy in the enjoyment of a government of their own. I wifh farther they would confider, that the defire of maintaining authority is warrantable, only as far as it is the means of promoting fome end, and doing fome good; and that, before we refolve to fpread famine and fire through a country in order to make it acknowledge our authority, we ought to be affured that great advantages will arife not only to ourfelves, but to the country we wish to conquer. That from the prefent contest no advantage to ourfelves can arife, has been already shewn, and will prefently be shewn more at large .- That no advantage to the Colonies can arife from it, need not, I hope, be fhewn. It has however been afferted, that even their good is intended by this war. Many of us are perfuaded, that they will be much happier under our government, than under any government of their own ; and that their liberties will be fafer when held for them by us, than when trufted in their own hands .- How kind is it thus to take upon us the trouble of judging for them what is most for their happiness? Nothing can be kinder except the resolution we have formed to exterminate them, if they will not fubmit to our judgment.

What

What ftrange language have I fometimes heard? By an armed force we are now endeavouring to deftroy the laws and governments of America; and yet I have heard it faid, that we are endeavouring to fupport law and government there. We are infifting upon our right to levy contributions upon them; and to maintain this right, we are bringing upon them all the miferies a people can endure; and yet it is afferted, that we mean nothing but their fecurity and happinefs.

But I have wandered a little from the point I intended principally to infift upon in this fection, which is, " the folly, in respect of policy, of the mea-" fures which have brought on this contest; and its pernicious and fatal ten-" dency."

The following observations will, I believe, abundantly prove this.

1st. There are points which are likely always to fuffer by difcuffion. Of this kind are most points of authority and prerogative ; and the best policy is to avoid, as much as possible, giving any occasion for calling them into question.

The Colonies were at the beginning of this reign in the habit of acknowledging our authority, and of allowing us as much power over them as our intereft required ; and more, in some instances, than we could reasonably claim. This habit they would have retained : and had we, inftead of imposing new burdens upon them, and increasing their reftraints, fludied to promote their commerce, and to grant them new indulgences, they would have been always growing more attached to us. Luxury, and, together with it, their dependence upon us, and our influence (a) in their affemblies, would have increased, till in time perhaps they would have become as corrupt as ourfelves; and we might have succeeded to our wishes in establishing our authority over them .---- But, happily for them, we have cholen a different course. By exertions of authority which have alarmed them, they have been put upon examining into the grounds of all our claims, and forced to give up their luxuries, and to feek all their refources within themfelves : And the islue is likely to prove the lofs of all our authority over them, and of all the advantages connected with it. So little do men in power fometimes know how to preferve power; and fo remarkably does the defire of extending dominion fometimes deftroy it .---- Mankind are naturally disposed to continue in subjection to that mode of government, be it what it will, under which they have been born and educated. Nothing roufes them into refistance but gross abuses, or some particular oppressions out of the road to which they have been ufed. And he who will examine the hiftory of the world will find, there has generally been more reafon for complaining that they have been too patient, than that they have been turbulent and rebellious.

Our governors, ever fince I can remember, have been jealous that the Colonies, fome time or other, would throw off their dependence. This jealoufy was not founded on any of their acts or declarations. They have always, while at peace with us, difclaimed any fuch defign ; and they have continued to difclaim it fince they have been at war with us. I have reason, indeed, to believe, that independency is, even at this moment, generally dreaded among them as a calamity to which they are in danger of being driven, in order to avoid a greater .---The jealoufy I have mentioned, was, however, natural; and betrayed a fecret opinion, that the fubjection in which they were held was more than we could expect them always to endure. In fuch circumstances, all possible care should have been taken to give them no reason for discontent; and to preferve them in fubjection, by keeping in that line of conduct to which cuftom had reconciled them, or at leaft never deviating from it, except with great caution ; and particularly, by avoiding all direct attacks on their property and legiflations. Had we done this, the different interests of fo many flates fcattered over a vast continent, joined to our own prudence and moderation, would have enabled us to maintain them in dependence for ages to come.—But inftead of this, how have we acted ?—It is in truth too evident, that our whole conduct, inftead of being directed by that found policy and forefight which in fuch circumftances were abfolutely neceffary, has been nothing (to fay the beft of it) but a feries of the blindeft rigour followed by retractation; a violence followed by conceffion; of miftake, weaknefs, and inconfiftency.——A recital of a few facts, within every body's recollection, will fully prove this.

(a) This has been our policy with respect to the people of Ireland; and the confequence is, that we now fee their parliament as obedient as we can wife,

In the 6th of George the Second, an act was passed for imposing certain duties on all foreign spirits, melasses and sugars imported into the plantations. In this act, the duties imposed are faid to be GIVEN and GRANTED by the Parliament to the King ; and this is the first American act in which these words have been used. But notwithstanding this, as the act had the appearance of being only a regulation of trade, the colonies submitted to it; and a small direct revenue was drawn by it from them. ---- In the 4th of the prefent reign, many alterations were made in this act, with the declared purpose of making provision for raising a revenue in America. This alarmed the Colonies ; and produced difcontents and remonfrances, which might have convinced our rulers this was tender ground, on which it became them to tread very gently .---- There is, however, no reason to doubt but in time they would have funk into a quiet fubmiffion to this revenue act, as being at worft only the exercise of a power which then they seem not to have thought much of contesting; I mean, the power of taxing them EXTER-NALLY .---- But before they had time to cool, a worfe provocation was given them; and the STAMP-ACT was passed. This being an attempt to tax them INTERNALLY; and a direct attack on their property, by a power which would not fuffer itself to be questioned; which eased itself by loading them; and to which it was impossible to fix any bounds ; they were thrown at once, from one end of the continent to the other, into refistance and rage. --- Government, dreading the confequences, gave way; and the Parliament (upon a change of ministry) repealed the Stamp-AS, without requiring from them any recognition of its authority, or doing any more to preferve its dignity, than afferting, by the declaratory law, that it was poffeffed of full power and authority to make laws to bind them in all cafes whatever. - Upon this, peace was reftored; and, had no farther attempts of the fame kind been made, they would undoubtedly have fuffered us (as the people of Ireland have done) to enjoy quietly our declaratory law. They would have recovered their former habits of fubjection; and our connection with them might have continued an increasing fource of our wealth and glory .--- But the fpirit of defpotifm and avarice, always blind and reftless, soon broke forth again. The scheme for drawing a revenue from America, by parliamentary taxation, was refumed; and in a little more than a year after the repeal of the Stamp AA, when all was peace, a third act was paffed, imposing duties payable in America on tea, paper, glass, painters colours, &c. This, as might have been expected, revived all the former heats; and the Empire was a fecond time threatened with the most dangerous commotions.-----Government receded again ; and the Parliament (under another change of miniftry) repealed all the obnoxious duties, EXCEPT that upon tea. This exception was made in order to maintain a shew of dignity. But it was, in reality, facrificing fafety to pride; and leaving a fplinter in the wound to produce a gangrene .- For some time, however, this relaxation answered its intended purpofes. Our commercial intercourfe with the Colonies was again recovered ; and they avoided nothing but that tea which we had excepted in our repeal. In this flate would things have remained, and even tea would perhaps in time have been gradually admitted, had not the evil genius of Britain flepped forth once more to embroil the Empire.

The East India company having fallen under difficulties, partly in confequence of the loss of the American market for tea, a scheme was formed for affisting them by an attempt to recover that market. With this view an act was passed passed to enable them to export their tea to America free of all duties here, and fubject only to 3d. per pound duty, payable in America. By this expedient they were enabled to offer it at a low price; and it was expected the confequence would prove that the Colonies would be tempted by it; a precedent gained for taxing them, and at the fame time the company relieved. Ships were, therefore, fitted out ; and large cargoes fent. The fnare was too gross to escape the notice of the Colonies. They faw it, and fourned at it. They refused to admit the tea; and at BOSTON fome perfons in difguise buried it in the sea.-----Had our governors in this cafe fatisfied themfelves with requiring a compensation from the province for the damage done, there is no doubt but it would have been granted. Or had they proceeded no farther in the infliction of punishment, than ftopping up the port and deftroying the trade of Bofton, till compensation was made, the province might possibly have submitted, and a sufficient faving would have been gained for the honour of the nation. But having hitherto proceeded without wifdom, they observed now no bounds in their refentment. To the Bofton port bill was added a bill which deftroyed the chartered government of the province; a bill which withdrew from the jurifdiction of the province, perfons who in particular cafes should commit murder; and the Quebec bill. At the fame time a ftrong body of troops was stationed at Boston to enforce obedience to these bills.

All who knew any thing of the temper of the Colonies faw that the effect of all this fudden accumulation of vengeance, would probably be not intimidating but exafperating them, and driving them into a general revolt. But our minifters had different apprehenfions. They believed that the malecontents in the Colony of Maffachufett's were a fmall party, headed by a few factious men; that the majority of the people would take the fide of government, as foon as they faw a force among them capable of fupporting them; that, at worft, the Colonies in general would never make a common caufe with this province; and that, the iffue would prove, in a few months, order, tranquillity, and fubmiffion. --Every one of thefe apprehenfions was falfified by the events that followed.

When the bills I have mentioned came to be carried into execution, the whole Province was thrown into confusion. Their courts of justice were shut up, and all government was disfolved. The commander in chief found it necessary to fortify himself in BOSTON; and the other Colonies immediately resolved to make a common cause with this Colony.

So ftrangely mifinformed were our ministers, that this was all a furprife upon them. They took flight, therefore; and once more made an effort to retreat; but indeed the most ungracious one that can well be imagined. A proposal was fent to the Colonies, called Conciliatory; and the fubstance of which was, that if any of them would raife fuch fums as fhould be demanded of them by taxing themfelves, the Parliament would forbear to tax them.—It will be fearcely believed, hereafter, that fuch a proposal could be thought conciliatory. It was only telling them; "If you will tax yourfelves BY OUR ORDER, we will fave " ourfelves the trouble of taxing you."—They received the proposal as an infult; and rejected it with difdain.

At the time this conceffion was transmitted to America, open hostilities were not begun. In the foord our ministers thought they had still a refource which would immediately fettle all disputes. They confidered the people of New-England as nothing but a mob, who would be foon routed and forced into obedience. It was even believed, that a few thousands of our army might march through all America, and make all quiet wherever they went. Under this conviction our ministers did not dread urging the Province of Massachusett's Bay into rebellion, by ordering the army to feize their flores, and to take up fome of their leading men. The attempt was made.——The people fled immediately to arms, and repelled pelled the attack.——A confiderable part of the flower of the British army has been destroyed.——Some of our best Generals, and the bravest of our troops, are now difgracefully and miserably imprisoned at Boston.——A horrid civil war is commenced ;——And the Empire is distracted and convulsed.

Can it be possible to think with patience of the policy that has brought us into these circumstances? Did ever Heaven punish the vices of a people more severely by darkening their counsels? How great would be our happiness could we now recal former times, and return to the policy of the last reigns?—But those times are gone.——I will, however, beg leave for a few moments to look back to them; and to compare the ground we have left with that on which we find ourselves. This must be done with deep regret; but it forms a necessary part of my prefent defign.

In those times our Colonies, foregoing every advantage which they might derive from trading with foreign nations, confented to fend only to us whatever it was for our interest to receive from them; and to receive only from us whatever it was for our interest to fend to them. They gave up the power of making fumptuary laws, and exposed themselves to all the evils of an increasing and wasteful luxury, because we were benefited by vending among them the materials of it. The iron with which Providence had bleffed their country, they were required by laws, in which they acquiefced, to transport hither, that our people might be maintained by working it for them into nails, ploughs, axes, &c. And, in feveral inftances, even one Colony was not allowed to fupply any neighbouring Colonies with commodities, which could be conveyed to them from hence. -But they yielded much farther. They confented that we should have the appointment of one branch of their legiflature. By recognizing as their King, a King refident among us and under our influence, they gave us a negative on all their laws. By allowing an appeal to us in their civil difputes, they gave us likewife the ultimate determination of all civil caufes among them. ---- In fhort. They allowed us every power we could defire, except that of taxing them, and interfering in their internal legislations : And they had admitted precedents which, even in these instances, gave us no inconfiderable authority over them. By purchafing our goods they paid our taxes; and by allowing us to regulate their trade in any manner we thought most for our advantage, they enriched our merchants, and helped us to bear our growing burdens. They fought our battles with us. They gloried in their relation to us. All their gains centered among us; and they always spoke of this country and looked to it as their home.

Such was the flate of things .--- What is it now ?

Not contented with a degree of power, fufficient to fatisfy any reafonable ambition, we have attempted to extend it .---- Not contented with drawing from them a large revenue indirectly, we have endeavoured to procure one directly by an authoritative feizure ; and, in order to gain a pepper-corn in this way, have chofen to hazard millions, acquired by the peaceable intercourse of trade. Vile policy ! What a fcourge is government fo conducted ?----Had we never deferted our old ground : Had we nourished and favoured America, with a view to commerce, inflead of confidering it as a country to be governed : Had we, like a liberal and wife people, rejoiced to fee a multitude of free states branched forth from ourfelves, all enjoying independent legislatures fimilar to our own : Had we aimed at binding them to us only by the tyes of affection and interest; and contented ourfelves with a moderate power rendered durable by being lenient and friendly, an umpire in their differences, an aid to them in improving their own free governments, and their common bulwark against the affaults of foreign enemies : Had this, I fay, been our policy and temper ; there is nothing fo great or happy that we might not have expected. With their increase our ftrength would have increased. A growing surplus in the revenue might have been gained, which, invariably applied to the gradual difcharge of the national debt, would have have delivered us from the ruin with which it threatens us. The Liberty of America might have preferved our Liberty ; and, under the direction of a patriot king or wife minifter, proved the means of reftoring to us our almost lost conflitution. Perhaps, in time, we might alfo have been brought to fee the neceffity of carefully watching and reftricting our paper-credit: And thus we might have regained fafety ; and, in union with our Colonies, have been more than a match for every enemy, and rifen to a fituation of honour and dignity never before known amongst mankind.—But I am forgetting myself—Our Colonies are likely to be lost for ever. Their love is turned into hatred ; and their refpect for our government into refertment and abhorence.—We shall fee more diffinctly what a calamity this is, and the observations I have now made will be confirmed, by attending to the following facts.

Our American Colonies, particularly the Northern ones, have been for fome time in the very happieft flate of fociety; or, in that middle flate of civilization, between its first rude and its last refined and corrupt flate. Old countries confiss, generally, of three classes of people; a GENTRY; a YEOMANRY; and a PEASANTRY. The Colonies confiss only of a body of YEOMANRY (a) supported by agriculture, and all independent, and nearly upon a level; in confequence of which, joined to a boundless extent of country, the means of subfishence are procured without difficulty, and the temptations to wickedness are fo inconfiderable, that executions (b) are feldom known among them. From hence arises an encouragement to population fo great, that in fome of the Colonies they double their own number in fifteen years; in others, in eighteen years; and in all, taken one with another, in twenty-five years.—Such an increase was, I believe, never before known. It demonstrates that they must live at their ease; and be free from those cares, opprefions, and discases which depopulate and ravage luxurious flates.

With the population of the Colonies has increased their trade; but much faster, on account of the gradual introduction of luxury among them. In 1723 the exports to Penfylvania were 16,000 l.—In 1742 they were 75,295 l.——In 1757 they were increased to 268,426 l. and in 1773 to half a million.

The exports to all the Colonies in 1744 were 640,1141.—In 1758, they were increafed to 1,832,9481. and in 1773, to three millions. (c) And the probability is, that, had it not been for the difcontents among the Colonies fince the year 1764, our trade with them would have been this year double to what it was in 1773; and that in a few years more, it would not have been poffible for the whole kingdom, though confifting only of manufacturers, to fupply the American demand.

This trade, it fhould be confidered, was not only thus an increasing trade; but it was a trade in which we had no rivals; a trade certain, conftant, and uninterrupted; and which, by the fhipping employed in it, and the naval flores fupplied by it, contributed greatly to the fupport of that navy which is our chief national ftrength.—Viewed in these lights it was an object unspeakably important. But it will appear ftill more fo if we view it in its connexions and dependencies. It is well known, that our trade with Africa and the West-

(a) Excepting the Negroes in the Southern Colonies, who probably will now either foon become extinct, or have their condition changed into that of Freemen.—It is not the fault of the Colonies that they have among them fo many of thefe unhappy people. They have made laws to prohibit the importation of them; but thefe laws have always had a negative put upon them here, becaufe of their tendency to hurt our Negro trade.

(b) In the County of Suffolk, where Bofton is, there has not been, I am informed, more than one execution these 18 years.

(c) Mr. Burke (in his excellent and admirable Speech on moving his refolutions for conciliation with the Colonies, P. 9, &cc.) has flewn, that our trade to the Colonies, including that to Africa and the Weff-Indies, was in 1972 nearly equal to the trade which we carried on with the whole world at the beginning of this Century.

Indies cannot eafily fublift without it. And, upon the whole, it is undeniable, that it has been one of the main fprings of our opulence and fplendour; and that we have, in a great measure, been indebted to it for our ability to bear a debt fo much heavier, than that which, fifty years ago, the wifeft men thought would neceffarily fink us.

This ineftimable prize, and all the advantages connected with America, we are now throwing away. Experience alone can fhew what calamities mult follow. It will indeed be altonifhing if this kingdom can bear fuch a lofs without dreadful confequences.—Thefe confequences have been amply reprefented by others; and it is needlefs to enter into any account of them—At the time we fhall be feeling them—The Empire difmembered; the blood of thoufands fhed in an unrighteous quarrel; our flrength exhaufted; our merchants breaking; our manufacturers flarving; our debts increafing; the revenue finking; the funds tottering; and all the miferies of a public bankruptcy impending— At fuch a crifs flould our natural enemies, eager for our ruin, feize the opportunity—The apprehenfion is too diffreffing.—Let us view this fubject in another light.

On this occasion, particular attention should be given to the prefent six-GULAR fituation of this kingdom. This is a circumstance of the utmost importance; and as I am afraid it is not much confidered, I will beg leave to give a distinct account of it.

At the REVOLUTION, the Specie of the kingdom amounted, according to (a) Davenant's account, to eighteen millions and a half .-- From the Accession to the year 1772, there were coined at the mint, near 29 millions of gold; and in ten years only of this time, or from January 1759 to January 1769, there were coined eight millions and a half. (b) But it has appeared lately, that the gold specie now left in the kingdom is no more than about twelve millions and a half.____Not fo much as half a million of Silver Specie has been coined thefe fixty years ; and it cannot be fuppofed, that the quantity of it now in circulation exceeds two or three millions. The whole specie of the kingdom, therefore, is probably at this time about (c) fourteen or fifteen millions. Of this feveral millions must be hoarded at the Bank .- Our circulating Specie, therefore, appears to be greatly decreased. But our wealth, or the quantity of money in the kingdom, is greatly increased. This is paper to a vast amount, issued in almost every corner of the kingdom; and, particularly, by the BANK OF ENGLAND. While this paper maintains its credit it answers all the purposes of specie, and is in all respects the fame with money.

Specie reprefents fome real value in goods or commodities. On the contrary; paper reprefents nothing immediately but fpecie. It is a promife or obligation, which the emitter brings himfelf under to pay a given fum in coin; and it owes its currency to the credit of the emitter; or to an opinion that he is able to make good his engagement; and that the fum fpecified may be received upon being demanded.—Paper, therefore, reprefents coin; and coin reprefents real value. That is, the one is a fign of wealth. The other is a fign of that fign. —But farther. Coin is an univerfal fign of wealth, and will procure it every where. It will bear any alarm, and fland any fhock.—On the contrary. Paper, owing its currency to opinion, has only a local and imaginary value. It can fland no fhock. It is deftroyed by the approach of danger; or even the fulficion of danger.

In fhort. Coin is the bafis of our paper-credit; and were it either all deftroyed, or were only the quantity of it reduced beyond a certain limit, the

(c) Or nearly the fame that it was in Gromwell's time. See Dr. Davenant's works, Vol. I. Page 365. paper paper circulation of the kingdom would fink at once. But, were our paper deftroyed, the coin would not only remain, but rife in value, in proportion to the quantity of paper deftroyed.

From this account it follows, that as far as, in any circumstances, specie is not to be procured in exchange for paper, it reprefents nothing, and is worth nothing .--- The fpecie of this kingdom is inconfiderable, compared with the amount of the paper circulating in it. This is generally believed; and, therefore, it is natural to enquire how its currency is supported .---- The answer is eafy. It is supported in the same manner with all other bubbles. Were all to demand specie in exchange for their notes, payment could not be made; but, at the fame time that this is known, every one trufts, that no alarm producing fuch a demand will happen, while he holds the paper he is possessed of; and that if it should happen, he will stand a chance for being first paid ; and this makes him eafy. And it also makes all with whom he trafficks eafy .- But let any events happen which threaten danger; and every one will become diffident. run will take place; and a bankruptcy follow.

This is an account of what has often happened in private credit. And it is alfo an account of what will (if no change of measures takes place) happen fome time or other in public credit. The description I have given of our papercirculation implies, that nothing can be more delicate or hazardous. It is an immenfe fabrick, with its head in the clouds, that is continually trembling with every adverse blast and every fluctuation of trade; and which, like the baseless fabrick of a vision, may in a moment vanish, and leave no wreck behind .- The deftruction of a few books at the Bank; an improvement in the art of forgery; the landing of a body of French troops on our coafts ; infurrections threatening a revolution in government; or any events that fhould produce a general panic, however groundlefs, would at once annihilate it, and leave us without any other medium of traffic, than a quantity of specie scarcely equal in amount to the money now drawn from the public by the taxes. It would, therefore, become impossible to pay the taxes. The revenue would fail. Near a hundred and forty millions of property would be deftroyed. The whole frame of government would fall to pieces ; and a flate of nature would take place .---- What a dreadful fituation? It has never had a parallel among mankind; except at one time in France after the establishment there of the Royal Miffifippi Bank. In 1720 this bank broke (a); and, after involving for fome time the whole kingdom in a golden dream, fpread through it in one day, defolation and ruin .---- The diffrefs attending fuch an event, in this free country, would be greater than it was in France. Happily for that kingdom, they have fhot this gulph. Paper-credit has never fince recovered itself there; and their circulating cash confists now all of folid coin, amounting, I am informed, to no less a sum than 1500 millions of Livres; or near 67 millions of pounds sterling. This gives them unspeakable advantages ; and, joined to that quick reduction of their debts which is infeparable (b) from their nature, places them on a ground of fafety which we have reason to admire and envy.

These are subjects on which I should have chosen to be filent, did I not think it neceffary, that this country should be apprized and warned of the danger

⁽a) See Sir James Steuart's Enquiry into the Principles of political Oeconomy, Vol. II. Book 4, Chap. 32.

(b) Their debts confift chiefly of money raifed by annuities on lives, flort annuities, anticipations of taxes for flort terms, &c. During the whole laft war they added to their psrpetual annuities only 12 millions flerling, according to Sir James Steuart's account; whereas we added to thefe another of their debts, as well as of the nuities near 60 millions. In confequence therefore of the nature of their debts, as well as of the management they are now using for hastening the reduction of them, they must in a few years, if peace continues, be freed from most of their incumbrances; while we probably (if no event comes foon that will unburthen us at once) fhall continue with them all upon us.

Was there no public debt, there would be no occasion for half the prefent taxes. Our paper-circulation might be reduced. The balance of trade would turn in our favour. Specie would flow in upon us. The quantity of property deftroyed by a failure of paper-credit (should it in fuch circumstances happen) would be 140 millions lefs; and, therefore, the shock attending it would be tolerable. But, in the prefent state of things, whenever any calamity or panic shall produce such a failure, the shock attending it will be intolerable. May Heaven soon raise up for us some great states who shall see these things; and enter into effectual measures, if not now too late, for extricating and preferving us !

Public banks are, undoubtedly, attended with great conveniencies. But they alfo do great harm; and, if their emiffions are not reftrained, and conducted with great wifdom, they may prove the moft pernicious of all infitutions; not only, by fubfituting fiftitious for real wealth; by increafing luxury; by raifing the prices of provifions; by concealing an unfavourable balance of trade; and by rendering a kingdom incapable of bearing any internal tumults or external attacks, without the danger of a dreadful convulfion: but, particularly, by becoming inftruments in the hands of minifters of flate to increafe their influence, to leffen their dependence on the people, and to keep up a delufive flew of public prosperity, when perhaps, ruin may be near. There is, in truth, nothing that a government may not do with fuch a mine at its command as a public Bank, while it can maintain its credit; nor, therefore, is there any thing more likely to be IMPROPERLY and DANGEROUSLY ufed.—But to return to what may be more applicable to our own flate at prefent.

Among the caufes that may produce a failure of paper-credit, there are two which the prefent quarrel with America calls upon us particularly to confider.— The firft is, "An unfavourable balance of trade." This, in proportion to the degree in which it takes place, muft turn the courfe of foreign exchange againft us; raife the price of bullion; and carry off our fpecie. The danger to which this would expofe us is obvious; and it has been much increafed by the new coinage of the gold fpecie which begun in 1772. Before this coinage, the greateft part of our gold coin being light, but the fame in currency as if it had been heavy, always remained in the kingdom. But, being now full weight, whenever a wrong balance of foreign trade alters the courfe of exchange, and gold in coin becomes of lefs value than in bullion, there is reafon to fear, that it will be melted down in fuch great quantities, and exported fo faft, as in a little time to leave none behind; (a) the confequence of which muft prove, that the whole fuperfructure fuperstructure of paper-credit, now supported by it, will break down .---- . The only remedy, in fuch circumstances, is an increase of coinage at the mint. But this will operate too flowly; and, by raifing the price of bullion, will only increafe the evil.-It is the Bank that at fuch a time must be the immediate fufferer : For it is from thence that those who want coin for any purpose will always draw it.

(a) Mr. Lowondes in the diffute between him and Mr. Locke, contended for a reduction of the flandard of filver. One of his reafons was, that it would render the filver-coin more commenfurate to the wants of the nation; and CHECK HAZARDOUS PAPER-CREDIT. Mr. CONDUT, Sir ISAAC NEWTON'S fucceffor in the mint, has propofed, in direct contradiction to the laws now in being, that all the bullion imported into the kingdom flould be carried into the mint to be coined; and only coin allowed to be exported. " The height, he fays, of Paper-credit is the firongeft ar-" gument for trying this and every other method that is likely to increase the coinage. For whilf " Paper-

For many years before 1772, the price of gold in ballion had been from 2 to 3 or 4 per cent. higher than in coin. This was a temptation to melt down and export the coin, which could not be refifted. Hence arofe a demand for it on the BANK; and, confequently, the necessity of purchasing bullion at a loss for a new coinage. But the more coin the Bank procured in this way, the lower its price became in comparison with that of bullion, and the faster it vanished; and confequently, the more necessary it became to coin again, and the greater lofs fell upon the Bank .----- Had things continued much longer in this train, the confequences might have proved very ferious. I am by no means fufficiently informed to be able to affign the caufes which have produced the change that happened in 1772. But, without doubt, the flate of things that took place before that year, must be expected to return. The fluctuations of trade, in its best state, render this unavoidable. But the contest with our Colonies has a tendency to bring it on foon ; and to increase unspeakably the distress attending it.

All know that the balance of trade with them is greatly in our favour; (a) and that this balance is paid partly by direct remittances of bullion; and partly by circuitous remittances through Spain, Portugal, Italy, &c. which diminish the balance against us with these countries. - During the last year, they have been employed in paying their debts, without adding to them; and their exportations and remittances for that purpose have contributed to render the general balance of trade more favourable to us, and, alfo, (in conjunction with the late operations of the Bank) to keep up our funds. These remittances are now ceafed; and a year or two will determine, if this contest goes on, how far we can fustain fuch a loss without suffering the consequences I have described.

The fecond event, ruinous to our paper circulation, which may arife from our rupture with America, is a deficiency in the revenue. As a failure of our paper would deftroy the revenue, so a failure of the revenue, or any confiderable diminution of it, would deftroy our paper. The BANK is the fupport of our paper : and the fupport of the BANK is the credit of government. Its principal fecurities, are a capital of near eleven millions lent to government; and money continually advanced to a vaft amount on the Land-tax, Sinking fund, Exchequer Bills, Navy Bills, &c. Should, therefore, deficiencies in the revenue bring government under any difficulties, all these securities would lose their value, and the Bank and Government, and all private and public credit, would fall together.____ Let any one here imagine, what would probably follow, were it but fufpected by the public in general, that the taxes were fo fallen, as not to produce enough to pay the interest of the public debts, befides bearing the ordinary expences of the nation; and that, in order to fupply the deficiency and to hide the calamity. it had been necessary in any one year to anticipate the taxes, and to borrow of the Bank.---In fuch circumstances I can fearcely doubt, but an alarm would

- " and as Paper-credit brings money to the Merchants to be exported, the money may go away in-
- " fonfibly, and NOT BE MISSED TILL IT BE TOO LATE: And where Paper-credit is large " and increating, if the moncy be exported and the coinage decreafe, THAT CREDIT MAY SINK " AT ONCE; for want of a proportionable quantity of Specie, which alone can fupport it in a " time of diffrefs."——See Mr. Conduit's Obfervations on the flate of our Gold and Silver Coins
- in 1730, Page 36 to 46.

(a) According to the accounts of the exports to, and imports from the North-American Colonies, laid before Parliament; the balance in our favour appears to have been, for 11 years before 1774, near a million and a balf annually.

[&]quot; Paper-credit does in a great measure the business of money at home, Merchants and Bankers are in not under a necessfity, as they were formerly, of coining a quantity of specie for their home trade;

foread of the most dangerous tendency .---- The next foreign war, should it prove balf as expensive as the last, will probably occasion fuch a deficiency ; and bring our affairs to that crifis towards which they have been long tending.----But the war with America has a greater tendency to do this; and the reason is, that it affects our refources more; and is attended more with the danger of internal diffurbances.

Some have made the proportion of our trade depending on North America to be near ONE HALF. A moderate computation makes it a THIRD. (a) Let it, however, be supposed to be only a FOURTH. I will venture to fay, this is a proportion of our foreign trade, the loss of which, when it comes to be felt, will be found insupportable. In the article of Tobacco alone it will cause a deduction from the Customs of at least 300,0001 per ann. (b) including the duties paid on foreign commodities purchased by the exportation of tobacco. Let the whole deduction from the revenue be-fuppofed to be only half a million. This alone is more than the kingdom can at prefent bear, without having recourse to additional taxes in order to defray the common and necessary expences of peace. But to this must be added a deduction from the produce of the Excifes, in confequence of the increase of the poor, of the difficulties of our merchants and manufacturers, of lefs national wealth, and a retrenchment of luxury. There is no poffibility of knowing to what these deductions may amount. When the evils producing them begin, they will proceed rapidly; and they may end in a general wreck before we are aware of any danger.

In order to give a clearer view of this fubject, I will in an Appendix, flate particularly the national expenditure and income for eleven years, from 1764 to 1774. From that account it will appear, that the money drawn every year from the public by the taxes, falls but little fhort of a fum equal to the whole specie of the kingdom; and that, notwithstanding the late increase in the productiveness of the taxes, the whole furplus of the national income has not exceeded 320,0001. per ann. (c) This is a furplus fo inconfiderable as to be fcarcely fufficient to guard against the deficiencies arising from the common fluctuations of foreign trade, and of home confumption. It is NOTHING when confidered as the only-fund we have for paying off a debt of near 140 millions.---Had we continued in a flate of profound peace, it could not have admitted of any diminution. What then must follow, when one of the most profitable branches of our trade is defroyed; when a THIRD of the Empire is loft; when an addition of many millions is made to the public debt; and when, at the fame time, perhaps, fome millions are taken away from the revenue ?--- I shudder at this prospect.----A KINGDOM, ON AN EDGE SO PERILOUS, SHOULD THINK OF NOTHING BUT A RETREAT.

SECT. IV. Of the Honour of the Nation as affected by the War with America.

NE of the pleas for continuing the contest with America, is "That our "honour is engaged; and that we cannot now recede without the most " humiliating conceffions."

With respect to this, it is proper to observe, that a diffinction should be made between the nation, and its rulers. It is melancholy that there should be ever

In 1775, being, alas! the parting year, the duties on tobacco in ENGLAND brought into the Exchequer no less a sum than 298,202 l. (c) See the Appendix.

⁽a) See the fubftance of the evidence on the petition prefented by the West-India Planters and Merchants to the House of Commons, as it was introduced at the BAR, and fummed up by Mr. GLOVER.

⁽b) The annual average of the payments into the Exchequer, on account of the duties on tobacco, was for five years, from 1770 to 1774, 219,117 l. exclusive of the payments from Scotland .-Near one half of the tobacco trade is carried on from Scotland; and above four fifths of the tobacco imported is afte wards exported to France, Germany and other countries. From France alone it brings annually into the Kingdom, I am informed, about 150.000 l. in money.

any reason for making such a distinction. A government is, or ought:) nothing but an inftitution for collecting and for carrying into execution of the people. But so far is this from being in general the fact, that the meafures of government, and the fense of the people, are sometimes in direct opposition to one another ; nor does it often happen that any certain conclusion can be drawn from the one to the other. --- I will not pretend to determine, whether, in the prefent instance, the dishonour attending a retreat would belong to the nation at large, or only to the perfons in power who guide its affairs. Let it be granted, though probably far from true, that the majority of the kingdom favour the prefent measures. No good argument could be drawn from hence against receding. The difgrace to which a kingdom muft fubmit by making conceffions. is nothing to that of being the aggreffors in an unrighteous quarrel; and dignity, in fuch circumftances, confifts in retracting freely, fpeedily, and magnanimoufly. ---For, (to adopt, on this occasion, words which I have heard applied to this very purpose, in a great affembly, by a peer to whom this kingdom has often looked as its deliverer, and whose ill state of health at this awful moment of public danger every friend to Britain must deplore) to adopt, I fay, the words of this great man ___ " RECTITUDE IS DIGNITY. OPPRESSION ONLY IS MEANNESS: " AND JUSTICE, HONOUR."

I will add, that PRUDENCE, no lefs than true HONOUR, requires us to retract. For the time may come when, if it is not done voluntarily, we may be obliged to do it; and find ourfelves under a necessity of granting that to our distresses, which we now deny to equity and humanity, and the prayers of America. The poffibility of this appears plainly from the preceding pages ; and fhould it happen, it will bring upon us difgrace indeed, difgrace greater than the worft rancour can with to fee accumulated on a kingdom already too much diffonoured.----Let the reader think here what we are doing. — A nation, once the protector of Liberty in distant countries, and the scourge of tyranny, changed into an enemy to Liberty, and engaged in endeavouring to reduce to servitude its own brethren.---A great and enlightened nation, not content with a controuling power over millions of people which gave it every reafonable advantage, infifting upon fuch a fupremacy over them as would leave them nothing they could call their own, and carrying defolation and death among them for difputing it.----What can be more ignominious ?-----How have we felt for the brave Corficans, in their ftruggle with the Genoefe, and afterwards with the French government ? Did GENOA or FRANCE want more than an absolute command over their property and legiflations; or the power of binding them in all cafes whatfoever ?---- The Corficans had been fubject to the Gencefe ; but, finding it difficult to keep them in fubjection, they CEDED them to the French .---- All fuch ceffions of one people by another are difgraceful to human nature. But if our claims are juft, may not we also, if we please, CEDE the Colonies to France ?--- There is, in truth, no other difference between these two cases than that the Corficans were not descended from the people who governed them, but that the Americans are.

There are fome who feem to be fenfible, that the authority of one country over another, cannot be diffinguished from the fervitude of one country to another; and that unlefs different communities, as well as different parts of the fame community, are united by an equal reprefentation, all such authority is inconfissent with the principles of Civil Liberty. But they except the cafe of the Colonies and Great Britain; because the Colonies are communities which have branched forth from, and which, therefore, as they think, belong to Britain. Had the Colonies been communities of foreigners, over whom we wanted to acquire dominion, or even to extend a dominion before acquired, they are ready to admit that their refiftance would have been just.—In my opinion, this is the fame with faying, that the Colonies ought to be worse off than the reft of mankind, because they are our own Bretbren. Again. The United Provinces of Holland were once fubject to the Spanifly monarchy; but, provoked by the violation of their charters; by levies of money, without their confert; by the introduction of Spanish troops among them; by innovations in their antient modes of government; and the rejection of their petitions, they were driven to that refiftance which we and all the world have ever fince admired; and which has given birth to one of the greatest and happiest Republics that ever existed. Let any one read alf, the history of the war which the Athenians, from a thirst of Empire, made on the Syracufans in Sicily, a people derived from the fame origin with them; and let him, if he can, avoid rejoicing in the defeat of the Athenians.

Let him, likewife, read the account of the focial war among the Romans. The allied ftates of Italy had fought the battles of Rome, and contributed by their valour and treafure to its conquefts and grandeur. They claimed, therefore, the rights of Roman citizens, and a fhare with them in legiflation. The Romans, difdaining to make those their fellow-citizens, whom they had always looked upon as their fubjests, would not comply; and a war followed, the most horrible in the annals of mankind, which ended in the ruin of the Roman Republic. The feelings of every Briton in this case mult force him to approve the conduct of the Allies, and to condemn the proud and ungrateful Romans.

But not only is the prefent contest with America thus difgraceful to us, because inconfistent with our own feelings in fimilar cafes; but also becaufe condemned by our own practice in former times. The Colonies are perfuaded that they are fighting for Liberty. We fee them facrificing to this perfuasion every private advantage. If mistaken, and though guilty of irregularities, they should be pardoned by a people whole anceftors have given them to many examples of fimilar conduct. ENGLAND should venerate the attachment of Liberty amidst all its exceffes; and, inftead of indignation or fcorn, it would be most becoming them, in the prefent inftance, to declare their applause, and to fay to the Colonies-"We excuse your mistakes. We admire your spirit. It is the spirit that has " more than once faved ourselves. We aspire to no dominion over you. " understand the rights of men too well to think of taking from you the inestim-" able privilege of governing yourfelves ; and, inftead of employing our power " for any fuch purpose, we offer it to you as a friendly and guardian power, to " be a mediator in your quarrels; a protection against your enemies; and an " aid to you in establishing a plan of Liberty that shall make you great and " happy. In return, we alk nothing but your gratitude and your commerce."

This would be a language worthy of a brave and enlightened nation. But alas! it often happens in the Political World as it does in Religion, that the people who cry out most vehemently for Liberty to themselves are the most unwilling to grant it to others.

One of the most violent enemies of the Colonies has pronounced them "all "Mr. Locke's difciples."—Glorious title ! — How shameful is it to make war against them for that reason?

But farther. This war is difgraceful on account of the perfuafion which led to it, and under which it has been undertaken. The general cry was laft winter, that the people of NEW ENGLAND were a body of cowards, who would at once be reduced to fubmifion by a hofile look from our troops. In this light were they held up to public derifion in both Houfes of Parliament; and it was this perfuafion that, probably, induced a Nobleman of the first weight in the flate to recommend, at the paffing of the Bofton Port Bill, coercive meafures; hinting at the fame time, that the appearance of hoffilities would be forficient, and that all would be foon over, SINE CLADE. Indeed no one can doubt, but that had it been believed fome time ago, that the people of America were brave, more care would have been taken not to provoke them.

Again. The manner in which this war has been hitherto conducted, renders it fill more difgraceful, English valour being thought insufficient to subdue the Colonies, the laws and religion of France were effablished in Canada, on purpose to obtain the power of bringing upon them from thence an army of French Papists. The wild Indians and their own Slaves have been infligated to attack them; and attempts have been made to gain the affistance of a large body of Russians. With like views, German troops have been hired; and the defence of our Forts and Garrisons trusted in their hands.

due

Thefe are meafures which need no comment. The laft of them, in particular, having been carried into execution without the confent of parliament, threatens us with imminent danger; and fhews that we are in the way to lofe even the Forms of the confliction. If, indeed, our miniflers can at any time, without leave, not only fend away the national troops, but introduce forrign troops in their room, we lie entirely at mercy; and we have every thing to dread.

SECT. V. Of the Probability of Succeeding in the War with America.

E T us next confider how far there is a poffibility of fucceeding in the prefent war.

Our own people, being unwilling to enlift, and the attempts to procure armies of Ruffians, Indians, and Canadians having mifcatried; the utmost force we can employ, including foreigners, does not exceed, if I am rightly informed, 30,000 effective men. Let it, however, be called 40,000. This is the force that is to conquer half a million at leaft (a) of determined men fighting on their own ground, within fight of their houses and families, and for that facred bleffing of Liberty, without which man is a beast, and government a curfe. All history proves, that in fuch a fituation, a handful is a match for millions.

In the Netherlands, a few flates thus circumflanced, withflood, for thirty years, the whole force of the Spanish monarchy, when at its zenith; and at last humbled its pride, and emancipated themsfelves from its tyranny. — The citizens of SYRACUSE alfo, thus circumflanced, withflood the whole power of the Athenians, and almost ruined them. — The fame happened in the contest between the house of Austria, and the cantons (b) of Switzerland. — There is in this cafe an infinite difference between attacking and being attacked; between fighting to destroy, and fighting to preferve, or acquire Liberty. — Were we, therefore, capable of employing a land force against America equal to its own, there would be little probability of success. But to think of conquering that whole continent with 30,000 or 40,000 ment to be transported across the Atlantic, and fed from hence, and incapable of being recruited after any defeat. — This is indeed a folly to great, that language does not afford a name for it.

With refpect to our naval force, could it fail at land as it does at fea, much might be done with it; but as that is impossible, little or nothing can be done with it, which will not hurt ourfelves more than the Colonifis.——Such of their maritime towns as they cannot guard against our fleets, and have not been already deftroyed, they are determined either to give up to our refertment, or (c) deftroy themfelves: The confequence of which will be, that these towns will be rebuilt in fafer fituations; and that we shall lose fome of the principal pledges by which we have hitherto held them in fubjection.——As to their trade; having all the neceffaries and the chief conveniencies of life within themselves, they have no dependence upon it; and the loss of it will do them unspeakable good, by pre-

⁽a) A quarter of the inhabitants of every country are fighting men.—If, therefore, the Colonics confift only of two millions of inhabitants, the number of fighting men in them will be half a million.

⁽b) See the Appendix to Dr. Zubly's Sermon, preached at the opening of the Provincial Congress of Georgia.

ferving them from the evils of luxury and the temptations of wealth ; and keep. ing them in that flate of virtuous fimplicity which is the greatest happines. know that I am now speaking the fense of some of the wifest men in America. It has been long their with that Britain would that up all their ports. They will rejoice, particularly, in the last restraining act. It might have happened, that the people would have grown weary of their agreements not to export or import. But this act will oblige them to keep these agreements ; and confirm their unanimity and zeal. It will also furnish them with a reason for confiscating the estates of all the friends of our government among them, and for employing their failors, who would have been otherwife idle, in making reprifals on British property. Their fhips, before useles, and confisting of many hundreds, will be turned into ships of war; and all that attention, which they have hitherto confined to trade, will be employed in fitting out a naval force for their own defence ; and thus the way will be prepared for their becoming, much fooner than they would otherwife have been, a great maritime power. This act of parliament, therefore. crowns the folly of all our late measures. --- None who know me, can believe me to be disposed to superstition. Perhaps, however, I am not in the prefent inftance, free from this weaknefs .---- I fancy I fee in thefe measures fomething that cannot be accounted for merely by human ignorance. I am inclined to think, that the hand of Providence is in them working to bring about fome great ends .- But this leads me to one confideration more, which I cannot help offering to the publick, and which appears to me in the higheft degree important.

In this hour of tremendous danger, it would become us to turn our thoughts to Heaven. This is what our brethren in the Colonies are doing. From one end of North America to the other, they are FASTING and PRAYING. But what are we doing ?---Shocking thought! we are ridiculing them as Fanatics, and fcoffing at religion.----We are running wild after pleafure, and forgetting every thing ferious and decent at Mafquerades -- We are gambling in gaming houses; trafficking for Boroughs; perjuring ourfelves at Elections; and felling ourfelves for places .- Which fide then is Providence likely to favour?

In America we fee a number of rifing flates in the vigour of youth, infpired by the nobleft of all paffions, the paffion for being free ; and animated by piety. ---- Here we fee an old flate, great indeed, but inflated and irreligious; enervated by luxury; encumbered with debts; and hanging by a thread.---Can any one look without pain to the iffue? May we not expect calamities that fhall recover to reflection (perhaps to devotion) our Libertines and Atheists?

Is our caufe fuch as gives us reason to ask God to bless it ?----Can we in the face of Heaven declare, " that we are not the aggressors in this war; and that " we mean by it, not to acquire or even preferve dominion for its own fake; " not conqueft, or Empire, or the gratification of refentment ; but folely to de-" liver ourfelves from oppression ; to gain reparation for injury ; and to defend " ourfelves against men who would plunder or kill us?"-Remember, reader, whoever thou art, that there are no other just causes of war; and that blood spilled, with any other views, must some time or other be accounted for. But not to expose myself by faying more in this way, I will now beg leave to recapitulate fome of the arguments I have used; and to deliver the feelings of my heart in a brief, but earnest address to my countrymen.

plain answer is, they are not your subjects. The people of America are no more the subjects of the people of Britain, than the people of York hire are the subjects of the people of Middlefex. They are your fellow-fubjects.

" But we are taxed ; and why fhould not they be taxed ?"--- You are taxed by yourfelves. They infift on the fame privilege.----They are taxed to fupport their own governments; and they help also to pay your taxes by purchafing chafing your manufactures, and giving you a monopoly of their trade. Muft they maintain two governments? Muft they fubmit to be triple taxed ?-Has your moderation in taxing yourfelves been fuch as encourages them to truft you with the power of taxing them ?

" But they will not obey the Parliament and the Laws."-----Say rather, they will not obey your Parliament and your laws. Their reason is : They have no voice in your Parliament. They have no fhare in making (a) your laws .----" Neither have most of us."----- Then you fo far want Liberty; and your language is, "We are not free; Why will they be free?"-But many of you have a voice in parliament; None of them have. All your freehold land is represented : But not a foot of their land is represented. At worst, therefore, you can be only enflaved partially .- They would be enflaved totally .- They are governed by parliaments chosen by themselves, and by legislatures fimilar to yours. Why will you difturb them in the enjoyment of a bleffing fo invaluable ? Is it reasonable to infist, that your discretion alone shall be their law; that they shall have no constitutions of government, except fuch as you shall be pleased to give them ; and no property except fuch as your parliament shall be pleafed to leave them ?-What is your parliament ?- Powerful indeed and respectable : But is there not a growing intercourse between it and the court? Does it awe ministers of state as it once did ?- Instead of contending for a controuling power over the governments of America, should you not think more of watching and reforming your own?-Suppose the worft. Suppose, in opposition to all their own declarations, that the Colonifts are now aiming at independence .- " If " they can fubfilt without you;" is it to be wondered at ? Did there ever exift a community, or even an individual, that would not do the fame ?--" If they cannot " fubfift without you ;" let them alone. They will foon come back. ---- " If " you cannot fubfift without them ;" reclaim them by (b) kindnefs ; engage them by moderation and equity. It is madnefs to refolve to butcher them. This will make them deteft and avoid you for ever. Free men are not to be governed by force; or dragooned into compliance. If capable of bearing to be fo treated, it is a difgrace to be connected with them.

" If they can fubfift without you; and also you without them," the attempt to fubjugate them by confifcating their effects, burning their towns, and ravaging their territories, is a wanton exertion of cruel ambition, which, however common it has been among mankind, deferves to be called by harder names than I chufe to apply to it .- Suppose such an attempt was to be succeeded : Would it not be a fatal preparation for fubduing yourfelves ? Would not the disposal of American places, and the distribution of an American revenue, render that influence of the crown irrefiftible, which has already flabbed your liberties ?

(a) " I have no other notion of flavery, but being bound by a law to which I do not confent." See the cafe of Ireland's being bound by acts of Parliament in England, stated by William Molyneux, Eiq; Dublin .---- In arguing against the authority of Communities, and all people not incorporated, over one another; I have confined my views to taxation and internal legiflation. Mr. Molyneux carried his views much farther; and denied the right of England to make any laws even to regulate the trade of Ireland. He was the intimate friend of Mr. Locke; and writ his book in 1698, foon after the publication of Mr. Locke's Treatife on Government.

What I have faid, in Part 1ft. Sect. 3d. of fubjecting a number of states to a general council reprefenting them all, I suppose every one must confider as entirely theoretical; and not a proposal of any thing I wifh, may take place under the British Empire. (b) Some perfons, convinced of the folly as well as barbarity of attempting to keep the Colonies (b) Some perions, convinced of the fally as well as barbarity of attempting to keep the Colonies by flaughtering them, have very humanely propoled giving them up. But the higheft authority has informed us, with great reafon, "That they are too important to be given up."—Dr. TUCKER has infifted on the depopulation, preduced by migrations from this country to the Colonies, as a rea-fon for this meafure. But, uplefs the kingdom is made a prifon to its inhabitants, thefe migrations cannot be prevented; nor do I think that they have any great tendency to produce depopulation. When a number of people quit a country, there is more employment and greater plenty of the means of fubfiftence left for those who remain; and the vacancy is foon filled up. The grand causes of depopulation are, not migrations, or even famines and plagues, or any other temporary evils; but the permanent and foout-working evils of debauchery, uxury, high taxes, and opprefilon. caufes of depopulation are, not migrations, or even famines and plagues, or the start oppression. but the permanent and flowly-working evils of debauchery, luxury, high taxes, and oppression. Turn

Turn your eyes to India : There more has been done than is now attempted. in America. There ENGLISHMEN, actuated by the love of plunder and the spirit of conquest, have depopulated whole kingdoms, and ruined millions of innocent people by the most infamous oppression and rapacity .- The justice of the nation has flept over these enormities. Will the justice of Heaven fleep ?---- Are we not now execrated on both fides of the globe ?

With respect to the Colonists ; it would be folly to pretend they are faultles. They were running fast into our vices. But this quarrel gives them a falutary check : And it may be permitted on purpose to favour them, and in them the reft of mankind; by making way for establishing, in an extensive country possessed of every advantage, a plan of government, and a growing power that shall astonish the world, and under which every subject of human enquiry shall. be open to free discussion, and the friends of Liberty, in every quarter of the globe, find a fafe retreat from civil and spiritual tyranny. ----- I hope, therefore, our brethren in America will forgive their enemies. It is certain that they know not what they are doing.

ONCLUSION.

AVING faid fo much of the war with America, and particularly of the danger with which it threatens us, it may be expected that I should propose some method of escaping from this danger, and of restoring this once happy Empire to a state of peace and security .--- Various plans of pacification have bee proposed ; and some of them, by persons so diffinguished by their rank and me rit, as to be above my applause. But till there is more of a disposition to attend to fuch plans; they cannot, I am afraid, be of any great fervice. And there is too much reason to apprehend, that nothing but calamity will bring us to repentance and wildom. ____ In order, however, to complete my defign in these observations, I will take the liberty to lay before the public the following sketch of one of the plans just referred to, as it was opened before the holidays to the house of Lords by the Earl of Shelburne; who, while he held the feals of the Southern Department, with the bufinefs of the Colonies annexed, poffeffed their confidence, without ever compromising the authority of this country; a confidence which difcovered itfelf by peace among themfelves, and duty and fubmiffion to the Mother-country. I hope I shall not take an unwarrantable liberty, if, on this occafion, I use his Lordship's own words, as nearly as I have been able to collect them.

⁶⁶ and abilities of the feveral provinces, as well as to those fundamental, unalien-⁶⁷ able rights of Englishmen, which no father can furrender on the part of his ⁶⁸ fon, no representative on the part of his elector, no generation on the part of ⁶⁹ the fucceeding one; the right of judging not only of the mode of raifing, but ⁶⁰ the quantum, and the appropriation of fuch aids as they fhall grant.—To be ⁶¹ more explicit; the debt of England, without entering into invidious diffine-⁶² tions how it came to be contracted, might be acknowledged the debt of every ⁶⁴ individual part of the whole Empire, Afia, as well as America, included.— ⁶⁴ provided, that full fecurity were held forth to them, that fuch free aids, to-⁶⁵ gether with the Sinking Fund (Great Britain contributing her fuperior fhare) ⁶⁶ fhould not be left as the privy purfe of the minifler, but be unalienably appro-⁶⁷ priated to the original intention of that fund, the difcharge of the debt;— ⁶⁶ and that by an honeft application of the whole fund, the taxes might in time be ⁶¹ leftened, and the price of our manufactures confequently reduced, fo that every ⁶² contributory part might feel the returning benefit—always fuppofing the laws ⁶³ of trade duly obferved and enforced.

"The time was, I am confident—and perhaps is, when these points might be obtained upon the easy, the conflictutional, and, therefore, the indispensible terms of an exemption from parliamentary taxation, and an admission of the facedness of their charters; instead of faceficing their good humour, their facedness of their charters; instead of faceficing their good humour, their facedness of their effectual aids, and the act of NAVIGATION itself, (which you fare now in the direct road to do) for a commercial quit-rent, (a) or a barren metaphysical chimæra.—How long these ends may continue attainable, no man can tell.—But if no words are to be relied on except such as make against the Colonies—If nothing is acceptable, except what is attainable by force; it only remains to apply, what has been so often remarked of unhappy periods,—Quos Deus wult, & c."

These are sentiments and proposals of the last importance; and I am very happy in being able to give them to the public from so respectable an authority, as that of the diffinguished Peer I have mentioned; to whom, I know, this kingdom, as well as America, is much indebted for his zeal to promote those grand public points on which the prefervation of Liberty among us depends; and for the firm opposition which, jointly with many others (Noblemen and Commoners of the first character and abilities,) he has made to the prefent measures.

Had fuch a plan as that now proposed been adopted a few months ago, I have little doubt but that a pacification would have taken place, on terms highly advantageous to this kingdom. In particular. It is probable, that the Colonies would have confented to grant an annual fupply, which, increased by a faving of the money now spent in maintaining troops among them, and by contributions which might have been gained from other parts of the Empire, would have formed a fund confiderable; enough, if unalienably applied (b), to redeem the public debt; in confequence of which, agreeably to Lord Shelburne's ideas, fome of our worst taxes might be taken off, and the Colonies would receive our manufactures cheaper; our paper-currency might be reftrained; our whole force would be free to meet at any time foreign danger; the influence of the Crown would be reduced; our Parliament would become more independent; and the kingdom might, perhaps, be reftored to a fituation of permanent fafety and profperity.

(a) See the Refolutions on the Nova-Scotia petition reported to the Houfe of Commons, November 29, 1775, by Lord North, Lord George Germaine, &c. and a bill ordered to be brought in upon the faid Refolutions. — There is indeed, as Lord Shelburne has hinted, fomething very aftonifhing in these Refolutions. They offer a relaxation of the authority of this country, in points to which the Colonies have always confented, and by which we are great gainers; at the fame time, that, with a rigour which hazards the Empire, we are maintaining its authority in points to which they will never confent; and by which nothing can be gained.

(b) See the Appendix.

To conclude.— An important revolution in the affairs of this kingdom feems to be approaching. If ruin is not to be our lot, all that has been lately done muft be undone, and new measures adopted. At that period, an opportunity (never perhaps to be recovered, if loft) will offer itself for ferving effentially this country, as well as America; by putting the national debt into a fixed course of payment; by subjecting to new regulations, the administration of the finances; and establishing measures for exterminating corruption and restoring the constitution. ——For. my own part; if this is not to be the consequence of any future changes in the ministry, and the system of corruption, lately fo much improved, is to go on; I think it totally indifferent to the kingdom who are in, or who are out of power.

I have given the Navy Debt as it was about a year ago. It must be now greatly increased. — The Civil Lift Debt has been given by guess. It is generally reckoned not to be more than the sum I have specified; and it is also expected that the Civil Lift income will be raised to 900,000 los 1.000,0000 per ana. In 1769 the sum of 513,511 l. was granted by parliament towards discharging the arrears and debts then due on the Civil Lift.

By an act of the first of George II. the income of the Civil Lift was to be made up to 800,000 l. whenever, in any year, the duties and revenues appropriated to it fell fhort of that fum. The clear produce of thefe duties for 33 years, or from Midfummer 1727, to Midfummer 1760, was, according to a particular account in my possed of the start of the sta

Add to it, pay for foreign troops, and all the extraordinary expences of our increased Navy and Army, transport fervice, recruiting fervice, ordnance, &c. and it will be evident that the whole expence of this unhappy year must be enormous.—But I expect that care will be taken to hide it, by funding as little as possible, and that for this reason it will not be known in its full magnitude, till it comes to appear another year under the articles of Navy debt, extraordinaries of the army, transport bills, ordnance debentures, &c. making up a vast unfunded debt which may bear down all public credit.

(a) The greateft part of this Revenue is borrowed of the Bank, and spent before it comes into the Exchequer. And therefore, is a debt conflantly due to the Bank, for which interest is paid. ——One of my answeres has denied this affertion; but at the fame time has confirmed it, by faying that only 2.250,000 l. was borrowed in 1775 on the unappropriated Revenue.—The fame writer has afferted, that there are THREE MILLIONS of India Annuities created by the company itself, and that this makes TWO MILLIONS difference in the amount of the national debt.—The truth is, that in confequence of taking Mr. Helm's paper (a paper perfectly adapted to the purpofe for which it is intended) without examining it; I had made the capital of the perpetual Annuities to be 124.056,4541.; whereas, if two millions India Annuities are rejected, and 906,8001. undivided capital of the Bank admitted, it comes out to be 122.963,2541. See p. 41. — The writer who has given to the public this information, received it, I underfland, from the great minifier who directs our Finances, to whofe Authority on this fubject I am very ready to fubmit. Pity it is, that he did not choose to communicate it by a perfon possible of more of his own ability and candour. the deficiency is a debt contracted laft year, which must be added to other debts (referred to in Page 43) arising from deficiencies in the provision made for the expences of last year. This provision amounted to 3.703,4761; but it has fallen short above a million and a half. (a)

The effimate for the peace effablifhment, including mifcellaneous expences, amounted, I have faid, in 1775 to 3.703,4761.—In 1774 it amounted to 3.804,4521. exclusive of 250,000 l. raifed by Exchequer Bills, towards defraying the expence of calling in the gold coin. And the medium for eleven years, from 1765, has been nearly 3.700,000 l.—According to the accounts which I have collected, the expence of the peace effablifhment (including mifcellaneous expences) was in 1765, 1766, and 1767, 3.540,000 l. per ann.—In 1768, 1769, and 1770, it was 3.354,000 l. per ann. — In 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774, and 1775, the average has been nearly four millions per ann. exclusive of the expence of calling in the coin.

The parliament votes for the fea fervice 4 l. per month per man, including wages, wear and tear, victuals and ordnance. This allowance is infufficient, and falls flort every year more or lefs, in proportion to the number of men voted. From hence, in a great measure, arifes that annual increase of the navy debt, mentioned in the fecond article of the National Expenditure. This increase in 1772 and 1773 was 669,996 l. or 335,000 l. per ann. The number of men voted in those two years, was 20,000. I have supposed them reduced to 16,000, and the annual increase of the Navy Debt to be only 250,000 l. Add 100,000 l. for the annual increase of the Civil Lift Debt (see p. 42.) and the total will be 350,000 l.

There is another method of proving that the permanent furplus of the revenue cannot exceed the fum now flated.

I have learnt from the higheft authority, that the national debt, about a year ago, had been diminifhed near 9 millions and a half, (b) fince the peace in 1763; including a million of the 3 per cents difcharged laft year. The money employed in making this reduction, muft have been derived from the furplus of the ordinary and flated revenue, added to the extraordinary receipts. These extraordinary receipts have confifted of the following articles. The Land Tax at 4s. in the pound in 1764, 1765, 1766, and 1771; or 1s. in the pound extraordinary for four years, making 1.750,0001. The profits of Ten Lotteries, making (at 150,0001. each Lottery) 1.500,0001. A contribution of 400,0001. per ann. from the India company for five years, making 2.000,0001. 4.110,0001.

(a) The expences of the army not provided for in 1775 have amounted to $45,000 l. fpent chiefly at Boffon. — The Navy debt increafed, during the courfe of the fame year, from 1.850,000 l. to 2.698,579 l.

(b) This was Lord North's account at opening the budget in 1775. The particulars, as I have been able to collect them, I have flated in the Polifeript. paid by the Bank in 1764 for the privilege of exclusive banking. Also the money paid by France for maintaining their prisoners; and the money arising from the fale of French prizes, taken before the declaration of war; from favings on particular grants at the end of the war, &c. &c.—which (a) I will take at no more than 300,000 l. Add 3.600,000 l. arising from a furplus of 300,000 l. for twelve years; and the total will be 9.260,000 l. which is a fum more than fufficient to difcharge 9 millions and a half of the public debt.

For 1772, 285,764l. or 10 per cent. nearly.

(a) My reason for this will be seen in the Postfcript, page 48.

(b) The annual medium of the payments into the Exchequer from the CUSTOMS in ENGLAND, for the laft five years, has been 2.521,769 l. —In 1774 this payment was 2.547,717 l. In 1775, it was 2.476,302 l. —The produce of the CUSTOMS, therefore, has been given rather too high.

The produce of the Excises in England has been higher in 1772 and 1775 than in any other two years; but the average of any three fuccefive years, or of all the five years fince 1770, will not differ much from the fum I have given. — In 1754, or the year before the laft war, the Cus-Toms produced only 1.553,254.1. — The Excifes produced 2.819,702.1. — And the whole revenue, exclusive of the Malt-tax and Land-tax at 2.5. was 5.097,617.1.

(c) Thefe branches of the revenue produced in 1754 210,242 l. I do not know how much they have produced lately; but I believe I have estimated them at the highest. — In 1754 the Revenue of the Post-Office was 100,710 l. It brought in last year 125,000 l.

250,000

It must be seen, that this account is imperfect. It is, however, sufficient to prove, that the whole money raifed DIRECTLY by the taxes, cannot be much lefs than TWELVE MILLIONS. But as the increased price of one commodity has a tendency to raife the price of other commodities; and as alfo dealers generally add more than the value of a tax to the price of a commodity, befides charging intereft for the money they advance on the taxes; for thefe reafons, it feems certain, that the taxes have an INDIRECT effect of great confequence; and that a larger fum is drawn by them from the public, than their gross produce.----It is farther to be confidered, that many of the perfons who are now fupported by collecting the taxes, would have fupported themfelves by commerce or agriculture; and therefore, inflead of taking away from the public flock, would have been employed in increasing it. --- Some have reckoned, that on all these accounts the expence of the taxes is doubled; but this muft be extravagant. Let us suppose a fourth only added ; and it will follow, that the money drawn from the public by the taxes (exclusive of tythes, county-rates, and the taxes which maintain the poor) is near 15 millions per ann.; a fum equal to the whole specie of the kingdom ; which, therefore, had we no paper currency, would be totally inadequate to the wants of the kingdom.

Without all doubt fuch a flate of things, in a great commercial nation, is moft dangerous, and frightful; but it admits of no remedy, while the public debt continues what it is.——With a view, therefore, to the quick reduction of this debt, I will throw away, after all I have faid on this fubject on former occafions, the following propofals.——It has appeared, that, fuppofing the taxes not to become lefs productive, and the current national expence to continue the fame that it had been for ten years before 1775, a furplus may be expected in the revenue of about 300,000 l. per ann.—With a furplus fo trifling, nothing can be done; but it might be increafed, first of all; By keeping the LAND TAX for the future at 4 s. in the pound.—As rents have been almost doubled, this will not be much more to the prefent proprietors of land, than 2 s. in the pound was formerly. 'Tis, therefore, equitable; and it will add to the national income near 450,000 l.

Secondly, All the money now fpent in maintaining troops in America might be faved.—The Colonies are able to defend themfelves. They wifh to be allowed to do it. Should they ever want the aid of our troops, they will certainly pay us for them. Indeed I am of opinion, they will never be willing to make peace with us, without flipulating that we fhall withdraw our troops from them. Were there any external power that claimed and exercifed a right of flationing troops in this country, without our confent, we fhould certainly think ourfelves entirely undone.—I will estimate this faving at no more than 200,000 l. per ann.

Thirdly, I do not fee why the peace establishment might not be reduced to what it was, at an average, in 1763, 1769 and 1770. This would produce a faving of 350,000 l. fer ann.—I might here propose reducing the peace establishment for the Navy to what it always was before the last war, or from 16,000 to 10,000 men. But it would be infinitely better to reduce the ARMY; and this might produce a farther faving of great consequence.—But waving this, I shall only mention, Fourthly, That contributions might be obtained from North-America and other parts of the Britith Empire, on the principles flated from the EARL of SHELBURNE's authority, in page 39.—I will estimate these at no more than 400,000 l. per ann.—(a) Add the Surplus now in our possession; and the total will be 1.700,000.—In the Introduction to the third edition of the Treatife on Reversionary Payments, I have explained a method of paying off, with a finking Fund of a million per ann. (b), a hundred millions of the national debt in forty years. What then might not be done with fuch a Fund as this ?

In five years 18.986,300 l. will fall from an intereft of 4 per cent. to 3 per cent. ____ Alfo, 4.500, cool. 31 per cent. 1758, will fall, in fix years, to an intereft of 3 per cent .- The long Annuities granted in King WILLIAM's time, will, in 20 years become extinct ; as will also the greatest part of the Life Annuities specified in page 41 .- All thefe favings will not amount to much lefs than 400,000]. per ann. And were they to be added to the fund as they fall in, its operations would be fo much accelerated, that in a few years we should fee this country above all its difficulties .--- Still more might be done by ftriking off unneceffary places and penfions ; by giving up all the means of corruption ; by reducing the pay of the great officers of state ; and fimplifying the taxes .---- A minister who appeared determined to carry into execution fuch a fystem, would foon gain the confidence of the public ; endear himfelf to all honeft men ; and in time come to be bleffed as the Saviour of his country.-But what am I doing ?----We have no fuch happy period before us .---- Our ministers are active in purfuing measures which must increase our burthens. A horrid civil war is begun ; and it may foon leave us nothing to be anxious about.

(a) We drew, fome years ago, this contribution from ASIA only: and it cannot be unreafonable to expect, that the greateft part of it may be again drawn from thence after the expiration, in $178 \circ$, of the charter of the EAST-INDIA company. At that period alfo, it is much to be wifted that fome effectual measures may be eftablished for making amends to the inhabitants of BENGAL for the flocking injuries they have fuffered; and for fkreening them from all farther injuries; and, likewife, for withdrawing from the crown that Patronage of the Eaft India Company, which it has lately acquired, and which has given one of the deepeft wounds to the conflictution.

(b) At the time of writing the introduction here referred to, above three years ago, I thought, or rather boped, that the furplus of the revenue might be taken at 900,000 l. per ann. But it must be confidered, that the nation was then in possession of a contribution of 400,000 l. per ann. from the India Company, which has been fince lost—See the Additional Preface to the 2d Edition of the Appeal to the Public on the Subject of the National Debt.

In 1764, there was paid off 650,000 l. navy-debt; but this I have not charged, becaufe fearcely equal to that annual increase of the navy-debt for 1764,1765, and 1766, which forms a part of the ordinary peace establishment. The same is true of 300,000 l. navy-debt, paid in 1767; of 400,000 paid in 1769; of 100,200 l. paid in 1770; 200,000 l. in 1771; 215,883 l. in 1772; and 200,000 l in 1774.

From 15.483,553 l. the total of debts difcharged, fubtract 6.650,000 l. the total of debts contracted; and the remainder, or 8.833,553 l. will be the diminution of the public debts fince 1763. Alfo, from 568,842 l. the total of the decrease of the annual interest, fubtract 199,500 l. (the total of its increase), and the remainder, or 369,342 l. will be the interest or annuity faved fince 1763 — To this must be added 12,537 l. per ann. faved by changing a capital of 1.253,700 l. (part of 20.240,000 l.) from an interest of 4 to 3 per cent. purfuant to an act of the 10th of George III.; also the lifeannuities that have fallen in ; which will make a faving in the whole of near 400,000 l. per annum : And it is to this faving, together with the increase of luxury, that the increase of the Sinking Fund for the laft ten years has been owing.

To the debts discharged the following additions must be made.

In 1764 there was paid towards difcharging the extraordinary expences of the army, 987,434 l. : In 1765, these expences amounted to 404,4961. : In 1766, to 404,3101 .- Total 1.796,2401.-This fum is at least a million higher than the extraordinary expences of the army for three years in a time of peace. This excels being derived from the preceding war, must be reckoned a debt left by the war. And the fame is true of 1.106,000 l. applied, in 1764, 1765, and 1766, towards fatisfying German demands .---- There are likewife some smaller sums of the same kind ; such as subsidies to Heffe-Caffel, Brunfroick, &c. And they may be taken at 200,000 !.--- The total of all these Sums is 2.306,240%; which, added to 8.833,553% makes the whole diminution of the public debt fince 1763, to be 11.139,793 !--- Towards discharging this debt, the nation, besides the surplus of its ordinary revenue, has received, at different times between the years 1763 and 1768, from favings on high grants during the war, from the produce of French prizes, from the Bank for the renewal of their charter, from the fale of lands in the ceded islands, and composition for maintaining French prisoners (a), 2.630,000 l. Also, from the profits of ten (b) lotternes (at 150,000 l. each lottery) 1.500,000 l.; from the East-India Company (400,000 l. per ann. for five years) 2.000,000 l.; from 15. extraordinary land-tax for 4 years, 1.750,000%; from delts difcharged at a discount, 400,000%; (c): In all 8.280,000%. — There remains to make up 11.139,793% (the whole debt difcharged) 2.859,7931; and this, therefore, is the amount of the whole furplus of the ordinary revenue for 12 years; or 238,000 l. per annum.

Soon after the peace in 1763, an unfunded debt, amounting to 6.983.5531. was funded on the Sinking Fund, and on new duties on wine and cyder at 4 per cent. There has been fince borrowed and funded on coals exported, window-lights, &c. 6.4c0,c001. The funded debt, therefore, has increated fince the war 13.383,5531. It has decreated (as appears from p-ge 47) 11.983,5531; and, confequently, there has been on the whole an addition to it of 1.400,0001. —During feven years, from 1767 to 1774, 1.415,8831. navy-debt was paid off. See above. But, as this is a debt anting from confiant deficiencies in the peace effimates for the navy, it is a part of the current peace expences.—In 1768 this debt was (d) 1.226,9151.—In 1774 it was 1.850,0001; and confequently, though 1.415,8831. was paid off, an addition was made to it, in feven years, of 623,0851. It encreated, therefore, according to this account, at the rate of 200,0001, for 200,000.

created, therefore, according to this account, at the rate of 291,000 l. per ann. Upon the whole, there is reafon to believe, that the annual increase of the navy-debt might have been more truly stated in page 44, at 300,000 l. per ann. and this would have reduced the annual ferplus of the revenue to 270.759 l. per annum.

(a) See the particulars in a pamphlet intitled, The prefent State of the nation, published in 1768. Page 56.

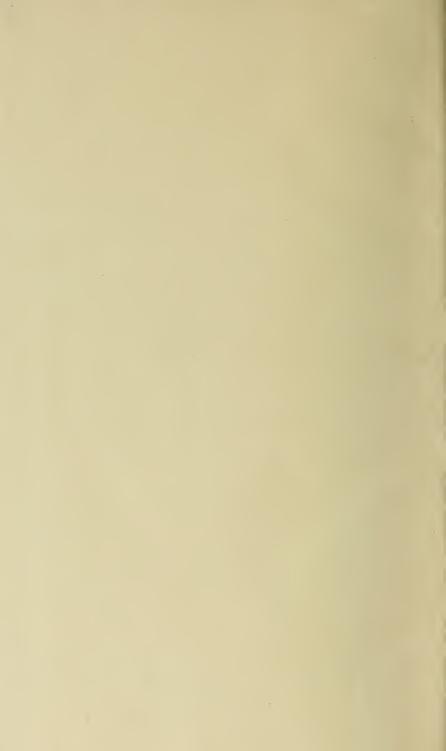

(3) Four of these lotteries have been annexed to annuities; but it is a great miftake to think that they have not been equally profitable with the other lotteries. For inflance 1 In 1767 a million and a half was borrowed on annuities, at 3 per cent. with a lottery of 60,000 tickets annexed. In the fame year 2.516,777. was paid off; but had it not been for the lottery, only 1.350,000. could have been raited on the annuities; and 1.0000. lefs much have been paid off.

(c) The diffounts only on a million and a half paid off in 1772, and 2 millions paid off in 1774 and 1775, amounted neafly to this fam.
